ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This report was written and updated by Claire Salignat, Project Officer at Forum réfugiés-Cosi and edited by ECRE.

The findings presented in this report stem from background desk research, interviews with field practitioners and lawyers, as well as feedbacks from French NGOs and the Paris based UNHCR office and finally statistics shared by the French authorities. These initial results have been gathered and compiled between February and April 2013. A second update of the report has been carried out between March and April 2014.

Forum réfugiés-Cosi wishes to thank all those individuals and organisations who gave up their time and shared their expertise to contribute or check information gathered during the research. Particular thanks are owed to many Forum réfugiés-Cosi colleagues who have shared their practical experience of the right of asylum in France - which have been key to feed this report with concrete reality-checks observations; to the two lawyers who have taken the time to share their views on the French system; to the staff of France terre d'asile, the ANAFE and the UNHCR Paris office for their expert and constructive feedbacks provided to the initial report and finally to ECRE for its support throughout the drafting process.

Forum réfugiés- Cosi would also like to thank the European asylum, migration and integration Fund for co-financing its awareness-raising missions which allowed us to provide additional time to research and draft this report.

Caveat

In France, asylum policies – including reception procedures - are largely under prefectural execution. This review of practices is mostly based on observations in the départements of Rhône, Allier and Alpes-Maritimes. However, the conclusions presented in this report on the concrete implementation of asylum policies have been cross-checked and triangulated with observations of these practices in other regions (in Paris for instance) and are supported by findings presented in other reports – be they official or drafted by civil society organisations.

In addition, despite a particularly worrisome situation in Mayotte, these issues could unfortunately not be treated in this report. We are aiming at making up for this deficiency in one of the next updates.

Important information

With a view to prepare for a reform of the French asylum procedure around July 2014, the French Ministry of Interior had initiated in July 2013 a large scale consultation of the main stakeholders, led by two MPs, Valérie Létard and Jean-Louis Touraine. After four rounds of workshops, the two MPs have submitted their recommendations to the Minister on 28 November 2013<sup>1</sup>.

These scenarios for the reform will be used in the discussions in early 2014 to shape the new asylum system in France.

Acknowledging that consensus had not been reached on all issues, the report includes a number of recommendations on the procedures and the reception conditions.

Procedure:

- Simplifying the administrative procedures by removing the “domiciliation” prerequisite (requirement of an address) with a view to accelerate the entry in the procedure (the address would be required only at a later stage)
- Granting a temporary residence permit (APS) for normal as well as for accelerated procedures (but with exceptions such as the Dublin procedure)
- Allowing the presence of a third person at the OFPRA interview (designation and modalities for their interventions would have to be supervised)
- Opting for the recording of the OFPRA interviews rather than the transcription with the possibility of making comments
- Considering the prioritisation of the examination of claims from asylum seekers in need of special procedural guarantees (including unaccompanied minors)

- Considering the extension of the use of the accelerated procedure in case “the applicant has only raised issues that are not relevant” or in case the “applicant has made clearly inconsistent and contradictory, clearly false or obviously improbable representations”.
- Reviewing the list of countries considered as safe countries of origin and foreseeing a mechanism for an urgent suspension or crossing off some countries when sudden changes justify so
- Looking into the possibility of granting a suspensive effect to appeals against transfer under the Dublin procedure
- Exploring the establishment of implicit withdrawal and of inadmissibility procedures
- Imposing an obligation of simultaneity of the appeal registration and the legal aid request. This would entail removing the possibility to request free legal aid during the one month period granted to make the appeal.
- Considering the transfer of the asylum competence to regular administrative courts (i.e. removing the authority of the National Court of Asylum (CNDA) for some cases)
- Considering granting a suspensive effect to the appeals made under the accelerated procedure (under some strict conditions)

Reception

- Establishing a new national orientation mechanism to provide asylum seekers with housing solutions thanks to transit centres used for short period of times (maximum 15 days) prior to a mandatory distribution of persons on the territory (quotas per region are proposed).
- Changing the calculation of the temporary waiting allowance to better take into account the household composition

In addition, the report considers the creation of centres dedicated to rejected asylum seekers where they would be put on house arrest.

The information in this report is up-to-date as of 4 May 2014.

The AIDA project

The AIDA project is jointly coordinated by the European Council on Refugees and Exiles (ECRE), Forum Réfugiés-Cosi, Irish Refugee Council and the Hungarian Helsinki Committee. It aims to provide up-to date information on asylum practice in 14 EU Member States (AT, BE, BG, DE, FR, GR, HU, IE, IT, MT, NL, PL, SE, UK) which is easily accessible to the media, researchers, advocates, legal practitioners and the general public through the dedicated website www.asylumineurope.org. Furthermore the project seeks to promote the implementation and transposition of EU asylum legislation reflecting the highest possible standards of protection in line with international refugee and human rights law and based on best practice.

This report is part of the AIDA project (Asylum Information Database) funded by the European Programme for Integration and Migration (EPIM). Additional research for the second update of this report was developed with financial support from the Fundamental Rights and Citizenship Programme of the European Union (FRAME Project). The contents of the report are the sole responsibility of the Bulgarian Helsinki Committee and ECRE and can in no way be taken to reflect the views of the European Commission.

The previous update of the report was published in December 2013.

Procedure

- The global recognition rate for 2013 stands at 24.5% (12.8% of the OFPRA decisions and 14% of the CNDA decisions have resulted in the granting of a protection). The global protection rate for unaccompanied minors stands at 56.7% for 2013.<sup>4</sup> – Increase in comparison to the 2012 rates (global recognition rate of 21.7% in 2012; global recognition rate for unaccompanied minors at 38.4%) .
- Modification to the list of safe countries of origin: the Management Board of OFPRA has decided on 26 March 2014 to remove Ukraine from the list of safe countries of origin. On 5 March 2014, UNHCR had called states to remove Ukraine from their safe countries of origin (SCO) list. Shortly after and prior to the official withdrawal of Ukraine from the French SCO list, the French Ministry of Interior had asked prefects to treat Ukrainian asylum applications through the regular procedure, and no longer through the accelerated one. The same management board had decided on 16 December 2013 to modify again the list of safe countries of origin and added Albania, Georgia and Kosovo to the list.<sup>5</sup> The Ministry of Interior sent an instruction to the Prefects on 2 January 2014 calling them not to deliver temporary residence permit to nationals of the latter countries whose request for a residence permit to lodge an asylum claim had been made after 29 December 2013<sup>6</sup> and to those whose request for a residence permit had been made before but has not yet been decided on.<sup>7</sup>
- Border procedure: In 2014, the Controller General of places of freedom deprivation has recommended that the notification of the “clear day” period, during which no return can be carried out, should be recorded in a distinct official report (proces verbal), countersigned by the third-country national. Alternatively, the “clear day” could be implemented automatically (unless the third country national expressly wants to be returned).<sup>8</sup>
- Vulnerable asylum seekers: A specific treatment for vulnerable groups of asylum seekers is gradually been considered by OFPRA. The action plan for the reform of OFPRA (adopted on 22 May 2013) had set the path for the creation of five thematic groups in order to reinforce the OFPRA’s ability to deal with protection needs related to torture, trafficking in human beings, unaccompanied children, sexual orientation and gender-based violence. These groups have been tasked to work on awareness raising, training and designing specific support tools to examine these claims (in particular during the interviews).<sup>9</sup> The practical impact of these measures remains to be seen. In addition, OFPRA staff is being trained on issues related to dealing with testimonies recounting painful events during the interview process. Starting in October 2013, Forum réfugiés-Cosi and the Belgium NGO Ulysse have conducted several 2-days trainings for OFPRA case workers with two main objectives: taking into account the difficulties asylum seekers may face when they have to share their story after traumatic events and providing case officers with tools to help them in these situations. OFPRA has announced its goal to train all 170 case workers by the end of 2015.<sup>10</sup> – This is a direct consequence of the anticipated impact of the transposition of the procedures directive.

Reception

- Lack of housing solutions: According to the Ministry of Interior, only 32% of the asylum seekers entitled to an accommodation in a regular reception centre had been able to access such a centre on 30 June 2013 (19 008 asylum seekers housed in a CADA centre out of 59 327 asylum seekers entitled to the reception scheme).<sup>11</sup> The number of reception centres is therefore clearly not sufficient for the French scheme to provide access to housing to all the asylum seekers who should benefit from it in accordance with the Reception Conditions Directive. On 31 December 2013, there were 15,000 asylum seekers on a priority waiting list to obtain a place in a CADA reception centre, amounting to an average waiting period of 12 months.<sup>12</sup>
- Temporary allowance for Dublinees: Asylum seekers who fall under the Dublin procedure in France can get access to the temporary waiting allowance until the effective transfer to another Member State, since an instruction from the Ministry of Interior published on 23 April 2013. This instruction was confirmed by a Council of State decision of 30 December 2013<sup>13</sup> which states in paragraph 13 that by excluding from the granting of the minimal reception conditions the asylum seekers who had not complied with the obligation to move to the Member State found to be responsible under the Dublin regulation, the circular of 1 April 2011 contradicts the 2003 Reception Conditions Directive. The Council of State reiterated that the reception conditions (i.e. temporary allowance) have to be granted until the effective transfer to another Member State. Besides, a Council of State decision of 12 February 2014<sup>14</sup> has recalled that, short of the transposition of article 16 of the Reception Conditions Directive (allowing the withdrawal of reception conditions in case of flight of the asylum seeker) into French law, the instruction to Prefects of 23 April 2013 to transmit to Pole emploi (French employment agency) the list of asylum seekers considered to be absconding “does not have the aim and cannot have the effect of resulting in the suspension of the granting of the temporary waiting allowance”.

Detention

- Dozens of suicide attempts are reported each year in administrative detention centres. Noting the weakness and the variations in the availability of psychiatric care in the French administrative detention centres, the 'General Controller' of places of freedom deprivation has recommended in 2014 that these centres and the relevant hospitals set up agreements by which mental health care would be accessible. He added that the regular presence of psychiatrists (be they independent or from hospitals) within the detention centres should be systematic.<sup>15</sup>

5. Short overview of the asylum procedure

An asylum application in France may be lodged either on the territory (obtaining the application from the prefecture) or at the border (in case the asylum seeker does not dispose of valid travel documents to enter the territory, at any time while in the waiting area) or from an administrative detention centre (in case the person is already being detained for the purpose of removal).

The examination of an asylum application lodged on the territory in France involves three main stages:

- (1) The Prefectures examine whether France is responsible for the examination of the claim by applying the criteria of the Dublin Regulation and also decide whether to place an application under the regular or the accelerated procedure
- (2) The French Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless People (OFPRA) undertakes an examination on the merits of the asylum application
- (3) The National Court of Asylum (CNDA) examines a potential appeal against a negative decision of OFPRA

To lodge an asylum application in France, asylum seekers must present themselves to the local prefecture to obtain a temporary residence permit on asylum ground. If such a permit is granted, the person enters into the regular asylum procedure and has to complete their application form (in French) and send it to OFPRA within a 21 calendar days period.

The Prefecture may refuse to grant a temporary residence permit for three reasons leading to the decision to treat the application under an accelerated procedure: a) the foreign national seeking asylum is a national of a country considered to be a safe country of origin (this is currently the case for 17 countries<sup>16</sup>); b) or the presence of the foreign national in France constitutes a serious threat to public order, public safety or state security; c) or the asylum request is based on a deliberate fraud or constitutes an abuse of the asylum procedure, or has only been made to prevent a notified or imminent removal order. In these cases, an accelerated procedure means that the person has 15 calendar days to lodge their application with OFPRA and that OFPRA has, in theory, 15 days to review and decide on the case. This also entails fewer social rights and fewer procedural guarantees than for a normal procedure.

Asylum seekers under a Dublin procedure do not receive either a temporary residence permit. They will not get access to OFPRA if another State accepts responsibility for their asylum claim.

The Prefectures as well as the first instance determination authority (OFPRA) are under the administrative supervision of the Ministry of Interior.

OFPRA is an administrative authority specialised in asylum and responsible for examining and granting, refusing, or withdrawing refugee status or subsidiary protection. It is independent in taking individual decisions on asylum applications and is not taking any instructions from the Ministry of Interior. A single procedure applies and includes a possibility for a person granted subsidiary protection to lodge an appeal to the CNDA in order to obtain refugee status. The French legislation provides for quasi-systematic personal interviews of applicants at first instance (four grounds are set in the law for omitting a personal interview). All personal interviews in the regular procedure are conducted by OFPRA. At the end of the interview, the protection officer writes an account and a proposition of decision, which is then submitted to the validation of their section manager.

The National Court of Asylum (CNDA) is the Administrative Court handling appeals against first instance negative decisions of the Director General of OFPRA. This appeal must be lodged within 30 calendar days after the OFPRA decision has been notified to the applicant. The appeal has an automatic suspensive effect for applicants under the regular procedure. However, it does not carry a suspensive effect for asylum seekers under an accelerated procedure and this appeal does not prevent the implementation of a removal order in those cases. The National Court of Asylum examines the appeal on facts and points of law. It can annul (therefore granting subsidiary protection status or refugee status) or confirm the negative decision of OFPRA.

An onward appeal before the Council of State can be lodged within two months. The Council of State does not review all the facts of the case, but only some legal issues such as the respect of rules of procedure and the correct application of the law by the CNDA. If the Council of State annuls the decision, it refers to the CNDA to decide again on the merits of the case, but it may also decide to rule itself for good on the granting or refusal of protection. The appeal before the Council of State has no suspensive effect on a removal order issued together with a negative decision of the CNDA.

A specific procedure to request an admission into the country on grounds of an asylum claim is established in the French legislation for persons arriving on the French territory through airports or harbours. The Border division of OFPRA interviews the asylum seekers and formulates an opinion that is communicated to the Ministry of Interior, which takes the final decision to authorise entry into France or not. In theory, this interview is conducted to check whether or not the given facts are manifestly irrelevant. If the asylum request is not considered to be manifestly unfounded, the foreign national is authorised to enter the French territory and is given an 8-day temporary visa (safe passage). Within this time frame, upon the request from the asylum seeker, the competent prefectures will examine whether they grant the person a temporary residence permit (allowing the asylum seeker to lodge their asylum request to OFPRA) or whether they implement the accelerated procedure for this request. If the asylum request is deemed as manifestly unfounded, the Ministry of Interior refuses to grant entry with a reasoned decision. This entails, after the possibility of an appeal to the Administrative Court within a 48-hours deadline, the removal of the foreign national.

B. Procedures

1. Registration of the Asylum Application

Indicators :

- Are specific time limits laid down in law for asylum seekers to lodge their application?
 Yes       No
- If so, and if available specify:
  - o the time limit at the border:            none
  - o the time limit on the territory:        none but lateness can result in the claim being considered as abusive
  - o the time limit in detention:            5 days
- Are there any reports (NGO reports, media, testimonies, etc) of people refused entry at the border and returned without examination of their protection needs?       Yes    No

An asylum application in France may be lodged either on the territory (obtaining the application from the prefecture) or at the border (in case the asylum seeker does not dispose of valid travel documents to enter the territory, at any time while in the waiting area) or from an administrative detention centre (in case the person is already being detained for the purpose of removal).

Asylum has to be claimed in person at the prefecture,<sup>17</sup> where the asylum seeker will be granted a temporary residence permit (autorisation provisoire de séjour) during an appointment which has to take place within a maximum of 15 days in theory.<sup>18</sup> In order to lodge an asylum request, asylum seekers must provide an address (domiciliation)<sup>19</sup>. It is only once the temporary residence permit has been granted that a form to formally register their asylum claim is handed over; upon doing so the asylum seeker has 21 calendar days to fill in the application form and send it by registered mail to OFPRA (Office Français de Protection des Réfugiés et Apatrides /French Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless Persons), a state institution under the administrative supervision of the Ministry of Interior that is responsible for the registration of the asylum applications.

Granting of a temporary residence permit may be refused on three grounds: a) the asylum seeker is a national of a country considered to be a safe country of origin (see the Section on safe country concepts); b) they constitute a serious threat to public order, public safety or state security; c) the asylum request is based on a deliberate fraud or constitutes an abuse of the asylum procedure, or has only been made to prevent a notified or imminent removal order. Asylum seekers not granted a temporary residence permit are channelled into an accelerated procedure, where they only have 15 working days to file their application to the prefecture which will in turn transmit the form to OFPRA.

The first instance determination authority in France is OFPRA. When OFPRA receives a complete application within the required deadlines, it is tasked with registering it and sends a confirmation letter to the applicant. A refusal to register the application is notified to those arriving beyond these deadlines. Such refusal can be challenged at the Administrative Court of Melun. This challenge can be useful if a "valid" excuse can be argued (e.g. health problems during the period).

French law does not lay down strict time limits for asylum seekers to lodge an application for asylum after entering the country. In practice, the lateness of the filing of an asylum application is sometimes used to consider the application as an abuse of asylum procedures and can result in the treatment of the request under the accelerated procedure. Jurisprudence of several appeal courts emphasises, however, that late submission of an asylum application does not constitute in itself an element proving an abuse of asylum procedures<sup>20</sup>. It should also be noted that in administrative detention centres, it is indicated to the persons held that their asylum applications will not be admissible if it is lodged more than five calendar days after the notification of their rights read upon arrival.<sup>21</sup>

A specific procedure to request an admission into the country to seek asylum is established in the French legislation<sup>22</sup>, for persons arriving on the French territory through airports or harbours. The request must imperatively be taken into account and the Border Police has to take a statement of the request for an admission on the basis of an asylum claim. The person is held in a waiting area for an initial duration of 4 days<sup>23</sup> to give the authorities some time to check that the asylum request is not manifestly unfounded. There is no strict deadline to apply for asylum when applicants are waiting for their admission at the border, the person may apply for asylum at any time during their holding in the waiting zone.

Even though this is exceptional, there are occasionally reports of people being simply refused entry at the border. One of such stories has been covered in the press in January 2014: two young Guineans

<sup>17</sup> Since 2009, the authority in charge of taking the fingerprints and of granting (or refusing) the temporary residence permit for asylum seekers is the prefecture head of the region. This rule has several exceptions for the following regions which have several prefectures responsible for this step in the procedure: Ile-de-France, Alsace, Corsica, Pays de la Loire, Provence Alpes Cote d'Azur, Rhone Alpes and Bourgogne. have been denied entry on the French territory upon their arrival (in Marseille) with a cargo ship from Dakar. ANAFE reported that the border police had refused to register their asylum application and refused their admission on the territory. These young Guineans have then been taken back to the ship, without having been placed in the waiting area and without benefiting from the “clear day” notice period (24 hours during which the person cannot be returned). This refoulement ended with a tragic turn of events as these two boys jumped into the water to escape this forced return and one of them drown in the sea.<sup>24</sup>

More generally, several difficulties can be highlighted in practice for asylum seekers with regards to the registration of their claim. For instance, the requirement to obtain a temporary residence permit from the prefecture before they can lodge their asylum application with OFPRA in fact imposes an additional delay for asylum seekers as some prefectures do not succeed in respecting the prescribed time limit of 15 days<sup>25</sup> between the filing of the required documents and the appointment at the prefecture to deliver the temporary permit. Indeed, short of enough staff, some prefectures sometimes take several weeks to several months before granting an appointment to applicants.<sup>26</sup> An official report from the General Controllers has described that asylum seeking families in Paris can only hope to lodge their asylum claim after a waiting period of 7 months and a half. In 2013, it was taking 4 months to get an appointment to obtain a ‘domiciliation’ address; an additional 3 months to get an appointment at the prefecture to request the temporary residence permit and another 3 weeks to receive the decision and to eventually be handed over an asylum application form.<sup>27</sup>

Similarly, the two members of Parliament in charge of the report on the reform of the asylum procedure have highlighted that in 2013, the waiting period to obtain an appointment at the prefecture of Essone was 2 days, while it was 16 days in Moselle, 20 days in Seine-Saint-Denis and 99 days in Lille.<sup>28</sup>

In July 2012, the UNHCR noted that “it is necessary that competent authorities solve the problem of “domiciliation” in some departments, the postal address required by the prefectures for filing an application for asylum and to be able to contact the applicant until he is admitted to a reception centre. This process is sometimes so long and complicated that asylum seekers are not able to access OFPRA and a possibility of material support before many months, this being in contradiction with the European Directive on Reception Conditions of 27 January 2003”.<sup>29</sup> Even though these delays do not pertain to the registration of the asylum application per se, they can have a dramatic impact on the time spent before access to the asylum procedure is really effective.

Finally, the requirement to write the asylum application in French is a serious constraint. For asylum seekers who are not supported through the procedures and who may face daily survival concerns, the imposed period of 21 days (or 15 days for the accelerated procedure) is very short.

Note / Asylum application lodged from administrative detention centres

For people seeking asylum in administrative detention, there is also the issue of the difficulty of preparing such an application in a place of confinement: very limited time to develop the reasons for the claim, no free access to an interpreter to write the application in French, dysfunctions during the transmission from the centre to OFPRA which jeopardises the confidentiality, stressful conditions prior to the interview with OFPRA, difficulties to locate and gather the necessary evidence, etc. The administration requires that the person held lodges their application for asylum within 5 days after placement in retention (the deadline is set at midnight on the 5th day). OFPRA has then 96 hours<sup>30</sup> to examine the request. This extremely brief period of time drastically reduces the chances of benefiting from an in-depth examination of the claim. The systematic placement of asylum seekers in administrative detention in accelerated procedures is also very questionable. The administration frequently considers that the only purpose of the request is to prevent the execution of the removal. Indeed, France is yet to enact rules to draw lessons from the European Court of Human Rights decision in the IM vs. France case.<sup>31</sup>

2. Regular procedure

General (scope, time limits)

Indicators:

- Time limit set in law for the determining authority to make a decision on the asylum application at first instance (in months): 6 months but not binding
- Are detailed reasons for the rejection at first instance of an asylum application shared with the applicant in writing?  Yes  No
- As of 31st December 2013, the number of cases for which no final decision (including at first appeal) was taken one year after the asylum application was registered: 17 000 at 1st instance and 21 837 at the CNDA stage

The first instance authority in France, OFPRA (French Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless People) is a specialised institution in the field of asylum, under the administrative supervision of the Ministry of Interior since November 2007. The law does not set a strict time limit for OFPRA to make a decision in the regular procedure. When a decision cannot be taken within six months, the Office has to inform the applicant within fifteen calendar days prior to the expiration of that period.<sup>32</sup> However, under accelerated procedures, the Office is supposed to decide within fifteen calendar days after the asylum application is submitted. This period is reduced to 96 hours if the asylum seeker is held in administrative detention.<sup>33</sup> There is no specific consequence if the Office does not comply with these time limits. In practice, some asylum seekers under the accelerated procedure wait for months before receiving the decision from OFPRA. The (total) average length for OFPRA to make a decision was of 186 days in 2012 (average for all types of procedures).<sup>34</sup> This average has increased in 2013: the waiting period for a decision was 204 days at the end of December 2013.<sup>35</sup> The average length of the appeal procedure at the Court of Asylum (CNDA) was 9 months and 29 days in 2012,<sup>36</sup> while it was 8 months and 26 days at the end of December 2013.<sup>37</sup>

At first instance, there was a backlog of 17 000 cases on 31 December 2013. . At the end of last year, these files were on average 156 days old (including a 3 months period that cannot be shortened<sup>38</sup>) . At the appeal stage, there was a stock of 21 837 claims to be examined on 31 December 2013. Most of the files dated from 2013 (19 025), some dated from 2012 (2352) but a few were pending since 2010

<sup>30</sup> Article R 723-3 of Ceseda. In 2013, the median period for a decision under the accelerated procedure in administrative detention was of 5 days (OFPRA, 2013 Activity report, 28 April 2014).

(76)) and even 2008 (7).<sup>39</sup> In 2013, the productivity of OFPRA's case workers has increased by 4%: each fulltime case worker has dealt with 390 cases during the year (compared to 375 in 2012).<sup>40</sup> The global recognition rate for 2013 stands at 24.5% (12.8% of the OFPRA decisions and 14% of the CNDA decisions have resulted in the granting of a protection). The global protection rate for unaccompanied minors stands at 56.7% for 2013.<sup>41</sup>

There is no system in France foreseen to give a priority<sup>42</sup> to some applications (e.g. vulnerable persons). There is an informal possibility to ask for a quick summon to a hearing but this is granted on a case by case basis in exceptional circumstances. As a general rule, NGOs often lack resources to provide the yet very crucial specific support for these vulnerable persons. Resettled refugees (under a UNHCR mandate) must also lodge an asylum application, like other categories of asylum seekers. This procedure is however usually much faster than for regular asylum seekers.

There is no official accelerated examination procedure or a prioritised examination procedure as part of the regular procedure in France but it is important to note that in practice, it has happened that OFPRA decided to accelerate the examination of claims from a specific nationality. For instance, from 22 July 2013 to 2 August 2013, OFPRA carried out a decentralised mission to Lyon where 14 case officers have interviewed more than 300 asylum seekers, mostly from Albania or Kosovo<sup>43</sup>. These interviews took place at the prefecture in Lyon (therefore not at OFPRA headquarters) with the aim to reduce the length of the first instance procedure to 2 months.<sup>44</sup>

An action plan for the reform of OFPRA has been adopted on 22 May 2013. It includes a monitoring mechanism of the quality of the decisions taken through an assessment of several sample cases. In addition, a "harmonisation committee", chaired by the Executive Director, was created to harmonise the doctrine (including ensuring the link to the jurisprudence of the National Court of Asylum (CNDA)) and monitor the decisions taken, .<sup>45</sup>

Appeal

Indicators:

- Does the law provide for an appeal against the first instance decision in the regular procedure:
  - Yes       No
  - o if yes, is the appeal       judicial       administrative
  - o If yes, is it suspensive       Yes       No
- Average processing time for the appeal body to make a decision: 8months and 26 days as of the end of December 2013

related to the CNDA of 16 August 2013<sup>46</sup> has introduced a longer period for asylum applications lodged in French overseas departments<sup>47</sup>; these asylum seekers have a total of 2 months to appeal the OFPRA decision. There is not a specific form to submit this appeal but it has to be written in French. This is an appeal made before an administrative court. This appeal has a suspensive effect for asylum seekers under a regular procedure but not for asylum seekers subjected to an accelerated procedure. The appeal is assessed on points of law and facts (documents and evidence supporting the claim have to be translated into French to be considered by the CNDA). The clerk informs OFPRA of the existence of an appeal against its decision and asks for the asylum application file to be transferred within 15 calendar days.

The receipt of registration notifies the applicant of their right to consult their file, of their right to be assisted by a lawyer, that the information concerning their application are subject to an automated processing, of the possibility that their appeal will be processed by order (“ordonnance”, namely without a hearing by the three judges), of their right to apply for legal aid and indicates the terms and conditions of this application. The same receipt requests the applicant to indicate the language in which they wish to speak at the appeal hearing in order to select the interpreter. In case the appeal had been lodged after the set deadline, and in case of dismissal (non-lieu) or withdrawal of the applicant, the president of the court or the president of one of the divisions can dismiss the appeal “by order” (ordonnance). If the appeal does not contain any serious elements to question the decision of OFPRA, it can also be dismissed “by order”.

There is no time limit set in law for the reviewing body to make a decision. The CNDA has ruled on 34 752 appeals in 2013. The average processing time for the CNDA to make a decision was 8 months and 26 days as of the end of December 2013<sup>48</sup> (it was 9 months and 29 days in 2012).

The new decree on the procedure related to the CNDA (16 August 2013)<sup>49</sup> has modified some of the procedural steps pertaining to the appeal stage. The decree has brought forward the deadline for closing the inquiry into the appeal to a minimum of 5 days before the date set for the hearing (instead of 3 days until now). This means that, as of 30 April 2014, it is possible to add further information to the appeal case only until 5 days before the hearing.<sup>50</sup>

Unless the appeal is rejected by order (ordonnance), the law provides for a hearing of the asylum seeker. In 2012, asylum seekers were summoned for a hearing generally 3 weeks, and at the latest 7 days, in advance. The decree of 16 August 2013 established that, as of 30 April 2014, a summon for a hearing has to be communicated to the applicant at least 30 days before the hearing day.<sup>51</sup> These hearings are public unless the President of the section decides that it will be held in camera (this decision is taken most of the time following a specific request from the applicants) and take place at the CNDA headquarters near Paris. Asylum seekers who are not housed in reception centres have to organise and pay themselves their journey, even if they live in distant regions. Only asylum seekers who do not receive the temporary allowance may receive an “emergency support” to cover these transport costs<sup>52</sup>. The hearing begins by calling the file by the hearing Secretary, followed by the presentation of the report by the rapporteur. If the applicant is assisted by a lawyer, they are invited to make oral submissions, the administrative procedure before the CNDA being written. The judges can also interview the applicant. Following these discussions, the case is placed under deliberations. Decisions

Henceforth, a decree from 12 June 2013 seeks to transpose article L. 733-1 of Ceseda, allowing the use of video conferencing for the CNDA hearings. The applicant will be informed by registered mail and will have 15 days to refuse it; however, this only applies to those living in mainland France.<sup>53</sup>

Finally, it is interesting to note that the new decree on the procedure related to the CNDA of 16 August 2013<sup>54</sup> foresees that in cases where the CNDA plans to reject the appeal by order (ordonnance) due to the absence of serious elements capable of contesting the negative OFPRA decision, the Court has the obligation to inform the applicant about their rights to access their file.<sup>55</sup> Besides, the same decree provides that if the Court fails to provide an interpreter in the language indicated by the applicant, the Court has to inform the latter that they will be heard in another language one can reasonably think they understand.<sup>56</sup>

The atmosphere<sup>57</sup> surrounding the hearings at the CNDA has raised many critics and has contributed to the onset of a strike of lawyers in May 2012. A mediator had been designated to find a solution to the crisis and one of his findings points at the fact that the presence of OFPRA representatives at these hearings is a requirement that should be fulfilled. At the moment, OFPRA is almost never present and this absence twists the hearing. The mediator states that “this is a legal anomaly as it places the CNDA rapporteur in a situation of proximity with the report which they should not have”.<sup>58</sup>

Also, asylum seekers face several obstacles to challenge a negative OFPRA decision. Indeed, despite the translation of time limits and appeal modalities at the back of the refusal notification, sometimes one can note a lack of understanding. This is a problem for people who are not accommodated in reception centres. Since 2012, these are no longer eligible for support for the preparation of their appeal within the orientation platforms. They can only rely on volunteer assistance from NGOs, whose resources are already overstretched. Besides, the absence of the section on the opinion of the protection officer in the negative decision notification to the asylum seeker makes it more difficult to prepare the appeal, as consequently there are no details on the case officer's argumentation that can be used to oppose the decision. Even if the request to receive this section is made as soon as the rejection is notified, it is rare to obtain it during the strict 1 month deadline to lodge the appeal.

An onward appeal before the Council of State is provided in the law<sup>59</sup> in case of a negative decision on the first appeal (CNDA) or in case OFPRA decides to appeal against the CNDA decision to grant a protection status. This appeal must be lodged within two months of notification of the decision of the CNDA<sup>60</sup>. The Council of State does not review all the facts of the case, but only some legal issues such as the respect of rules of procedure and the correct application of the law by the CNDA. If the Council of State annuls the decision, it refers to the court to decide again on the merits of the case, but it may also decide to rule itself on the granting or refusal of protection.

This appeal before the Council of State must be presented by a lawyer registered with the Council of State. If the asylum seeker's income is too low to initiate this action, they may request legal aid to the Office of legal aid of the Council of State.

Personal Interview

Indicators:

- Is a personal interview of the asylum seeker conducted in practice in most cases in the regular procedure?  Yes  No
- If so, are interpreters available in practice, for interviews?  Yes  No
- In the regular procedure, is the interview conducted by the authority responsible for taking the decision?  Yes  No
- Are interviews ever conducted through video conferencing?  Frequently  Rarely  Never

The French legislation provides for systematic personal interviews of applicants.<sup>61</sup> Four grounds are set in the law for omitting a personal interview: a) OFPRA (French Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless People) is about to take a positive decision from the evidence at its disposal b) The applicant is a national of a country for which the provision in article 1.C(5) of the Geneva Convention has been implemented (cessation clause); c) the evidence submitted in support of the application is manifestly unfounded d) medical reasons prohibit the conducting of the interview. In practice, OFPRA rarely omits to conduct interviews (for first applications at least). In 2013, taken globally, 94% of the asylum seekers were summoned for an interview (the rate for interviews actually taking place is 79%).<sup>62</sup>

All personal interviews in the regular procedure are conducted by protection officers from OFPRA, the authority responsible for taking decisions on asylum applications. At the end of the interview, the protection officer writes a written account and a proposition of decision which is then submitted to the validation of their section manager. This report is not a verbatim of the interview as the protection officer is on their own to take notes at the same time they conduct the interview. The report is a summary of the questions asked and the answers provided. It also mentions the duration of the interview and conditions of writing the account. Furthermore, since the report is sent to the asylum seeker together with the notification of the rejection, the applicant does not have the opportunity to make further comments before a first instance decision is taken. The section on the opinion of the protection officer is not included in the document received by the asylum seeker; but it can be obtained upon special request. The report is written in French and is not translated for the applicant. In practice, the quality of the interview notes can be very variable. Problems encountered are inherent to an interview summary: it is difficult to reflect the reality and avoid simplifying the remarks made. According to the mediator for the CNDA procedures, "especially since the interviews at OFPRA have become systematic, the reports are not offering, according to several sources, all the qualities that we could expect."<sup>63</sup> Audio or video recording of the personal interview is not required under national legislation.

The presence of an interpreter during the personal interview is provided if the request had been made in the application form. They are usually available<sup>64</sup> but some difficulties are frequently observed (for instance translation in Russian is often imposed even though the language requested was Chechen and Serbo-Croatian can be imposed even if the Romani language had been requested). Rare languages (such as Susu, or Edo) are often not well represented. It is not set in the legislation that the choice of the interpreter is to be made according to gender considerations but it is possible to ask to be heard by a protection officer of the same sex when filling in the OFPRA application form. According to some stakeholders, the quality of the translations provided can vary widely. Some asylum seekers have reported issues with translations that are too simplified (approximate translations or not in line with their answers) or with inappropriate behaviours (inattentive interpreters or taking the liberty to make personal reflections or laughing with the case officer). Finally, sometimes the protection officers are themselves acting as interpreters and this can have diverse impact. Some asylum seekers are reporting difficulties to open up to a person who speaks the language of the country involved in the invoked persecutions. Nevertheless, it has also been reported that there are sometimes advantages to the fact that the protection officer can speak the language of the applicant; such as demonstrating a particular interest for the region of origin.

Interviews can be conducted through video conferencing. The number of interviews conducted via videoconferencing has increased from 1,000 in 2010 to 1,800 in 2013. Their share now stands at 5% of the total. In 2013, more than 1'000 videoconference interviews have been conducted from the unit in Basse-Terre (921 with Guyane, 102 with Martinique and 16 with Saint Martin).

In mainland France, a new video connection was set up between OFPRA and the administrative detention centre in Toulouse. Operational since September 2011, this connection also covers administrative detention centres of Perpignan, Sète and Hendaye (150 interviews in 2012).

Legal assistance

Indicators:

- Do asylum seekers have access to free legal assistance at first instance in the regular procedure in practice?
 Yes       not always/with difficulty       No
- Do asylum seekers have access to free legal assistance in the appeal procedure against a negative decision?
 Yes       not always/with difficulty       No
- In the first instance procedure, does free legal assistance cover:
 representation during the personal interview       legal advice       both
- In the appeal against a negative decision, does free legal assistance cover representation in courts       legal advice       both

The modalities and the degree of legal assistance provided to asylum seekers in the first instance are dependent on reception conditions they enjoy.

- If the applicant is hosted in a reception centre for asylum seekers (CADA), they can be supported in the writing of their application form by staff of the reception centres. According to the missions set in their framework agreement,<sup>65</sup> CADA teams (legal advisers or should also assist the applicant in the preparation of their interview at OFPRA (French Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless People) or their hearing at the CNDA (National Court of Asylum). The team can provide advice and support to find a lawyer, either under the legal aid scheme or outside of it.
- If the applicant cannot be accommodated in a reception centre, then the “reference framework” for asylum seekers orientation platforms<sup>66</sup> (December 2011<sup>67</sup>) applies (with the exception of those benefiting from support provided in some emergency reception structures who can benefit from the assistance provided in those centres). These asylum seekers are assisted in their paperwork, such as their application for legal aid and their residence permit renewal process for example (for asylum seekers in the regular procedure). Asylum seekers may also be assisted in the constitution of their application for asylum but the preparation for the interview is theoretically excluded. These downgraded conditions are applied in practice by the platforms thus asylum seekers have to largely rely on legal support provided by NGO volunteers.

<sup>66</sup> In France, these orientation platforms (plateformes d'accueil) can have several missions: they can receive asylum seekers to provide administrative, legal and social support and can also handle requests for housing and postal address (domiciliation). 23 of these platforms are managed by NGOs.

Depending on where these structured legal assistance services take place (CADA or orientation platforms), they are funded by the French Office of Immigration and Integration (OFII), by the Ministry of Interior and/or by EU funding (European Refugee Fund). Some local authorities sometimes contribute to this funding.

Access to legal assistance is therefore uneven depending on the type of reception conditions provided. Asylum seekers in the most precarious situations, those without reception conditions, are offered fewer services than those housed in CADA. The two Members of Parliament in charge of the report on the asylum reform admitted themselves that this situation leads to unequal treatment between asylum seekers housed in CADA centres, who receive support and in-depth assistance, and asylum seekers housed in emergency facilities, who are without direct support and are sometimes located far away from the regional orientation platforms. Furthermore, these platforms do not have the same capacity as in CADA centres, greatly limiting the services provided to these persons.<sup>68</sup>

At the appeal stage before the CNDA (National Court of Asylum), asylum seekers in the regular procedure continue to receive legal assistance from people supporting them in reception centres. Access to this support is much more difficult for asylum seekers not accommodated in CADA or transit centres as legal support for the preparation of appeals to the CNDA are no longer funded within the “reference framework” of the orientation platforms.

Since 1 December 2008, the law<sup>69</sup> foresees the granting of a legal aid (aide juridictionnelle for lawyers) to file an appeal to the CNDA in case of rejection of the asylum application by OFPRA<sup>70</sup> (thus removing the entry and residence conditions imposed since 1991). Legal costs can therefore, upon certain conditions, be borne by the State. Legal aid can be granted if: the appellant’s resources do not exceed a certain threshold (936 Euros per month for full legal aid and 1,404 Euros per month for partial legal aid for a single person in 2014),<sup>71</sup> if the appeal does not appear to be manifestly inadmissible or unfounded; and if the legal allowance application is submitted no later than one month after receiving the confirmation of receipt of their appeal by the CNDA. This allowance must be requested in writing by the applicant themselves or by their lawyer. If the request is filled during the set period for the appeal to be lodged, this one month delay to appeal is then suspended until a decision on granting legal aid is made. A new period starts after the receipt of the decision of the legal aid office of the CNDA.<sup>72</sup> At the CNDA the recipient of legal aid has the right to choose their lawyer freely or to have one appointed for them by the Legal Aid Office.<sup>73</sup> The refusal to grant legal aid may be challenged to the President of the CNDA within eight days. This legal aid for asylum seekers is funded through the State budget for the general legal aid system.

In practice, legal aid is rather widely granted. In 2013, the CNDA’s legal aid office registered 22,665 requests (6.9% more than in 2012) and took 22,149 decisions. These requests have been accepted in 80% of the cases.<sup>74</sup> To our knowledge, there is no denial of legal aid on the ground that the appeal is deemed to be unfounded (in regular procedures). In 2013, 90.3% of the claimants were assisted by a lawyer at the CNDA hearing.

In 2012, lawyers in the field of asylum were granted a lower financial compensation (8 credits, or 182 Euros per file) than the fee allocated for common law cases before administrative courts. The Ministry of Justice itself has admitted<sup>75</sup> that this level of compensation does not encourage lawyers to volunteer as these cases are often complex and that contacts with their clients are difficult because of the language barrier. A decree from 20 June 2013 doubles the unit value (16 credits (380 euros) for appeals with a hearing and 4 credits (95 euros) for appeals without a hearing) for appeals brought before the CNDA.<sup>76</sup>

However, this compensation is still deemed insufficient<sup>77</sup> by many asylum actors in France, preventing lawyers from doing serious and argued work for each case. In particular, it is not enough to resort to an interpreter during the preparation of the case.<sup>78</sup> This is so off-putting that lawyers specialised in asylum law refuse most of the time to work under the legal aid scheme. Often, lawyers are court-appointed by the CNDA.<sup>79</sup> The difficulty is that court-appointed lawyers are informed of the name of their client very shortly before the hearing (about 3 weeks) and do not meet with them until the last moment (as these lawyers are often based in Paris). These lawyers sometimes refuse to help with the writing of the appeal and only undertake the representation in court. This poses great difficulties for asylum seekers to organise and prepare properly for the hearing. Asylum seekers who are not accommodated in reception centres are therefore on their own to write their appeal and face a high risk of seeing their appeal rejected by order (ordonnance) due to insufficient arguments.

- Number of incoming requests in the previous year: 3 426 in 2013
- Number of outgoing transfers carried out effectively in the previous year: 645 persons in 2013
- Number of incoming transfers carried out effectively in the previous year: 834 persons in 2013

Procedure

Indicator:

- If another EU Member State accepts responsibility for the asylum applicant, how long does it take in practice (on average) before the applicant is transferred to the responsible Member State? not available

The Dublin procedure is applied to all asylum seekers above 14 years old without exception (as per the Regulation). The official policy of the French Dublin unit is that it does not transfer unaccompanied children under the Dublin Regulation. Unaccompanied children can however be placed under a Dublin procedure by prefectures.

<sup>78</sup> MM Jean-Yves Leconte and Christophe-André Frassa, Information report n°130, Sénat, 14 November 2012.

<sup>79</sup> The decree n° 2013-525 of 20 June 2013 on the compensation for the missions of Legal aid carried out by lawyers at the CNDA also extends the possibility to designate court-appointed lawyers to all lawyers registered in any Bar in France (it was previously restricted to the Bars of Paris and Versailles).

During the application process, the officers in prefectures are requested to take fingerprints for each and every asylum seeker above 14 years old and they have a duty to check these fingerprints in the EURODAC system. An exception is made for asylum seekers who have fingerprints that are said to be unfit for identification (i.e. unreadable). In this case, asylum seekers will be summoned again within a month and then they will be placed in an accelerated procedure if their fingerprints are still unfit for identification.<sup>80</sup>

In practice, the elements taken into account to determine the state responsible can vary from one prefecture to another but it has been observed that the taking of fingerprints (and therefore the identification of another responsible state) is always taking precedence over the application of the other criteria. This is actually stated in the circular of 1st April 2011:<sup>81</sup> the taking of fingerprints will be decisive in the search of the most likely responsible state.

Some information on the Dublin procedure is given at the desks in prefectures. The presence of interpreter at that stage is not guaranteed and practice varies widely depending on the prefectures (e.g. in Nice, an interpreter is called to translate the written information when the applicant does not speak French). The impact of the guarantees included in the Dublin III regulation in that regard still remains to be seen in France.

In the Rhône department, the applicant is informed that a take back or a taking charge procedure has been initiated through the information written at the back of his Dublin notice document (information translated in the applicant's language). However, there is not necessarily information neither about the country which was contacted nor on the criteria leading to this referral.

The asylum seeker is not necessarily informed about the date when the country determined to be responsible for their application is contacted and sometimes does not know the date of the requested Member State's response either. Asylum seekers subjected to the Dublin procedure are formally informed about these dates through the notification of readmission order letter delivered to them once the decision to "take charge" or "take back" has been made. In Lyon, this decision is generally explained and indicates the deadline until when the transfer must take place.

It is difficult to know how the sovereignty clause is applied partly because the prefectures simply allow the asylum seeker to lodge a regular application for asylum, without having to explain why and without mentioning whether it is under one clause or the other.<sup>82</sup> In Paris, it seems that the humanitarian clause was used for asylum seekers who were deemed not fit for travel and for whom no transfer could be carried out. These clauses are not widely used in any case in France. For example, in the prefecture of Nice there has been a case where an asylum seeker who was ill was transferred to Poland whilst his wife had applied for asylum in France.

When a Member State has agreed to take charge of an asylum seeker, 3 transfer modalities are available:

- Voluntary transfer initiated by the applicant themselves. A laissez-passer is provided as well as a meeting point in the host country
- Controlled transfer : the applicant is accompanied by police forces up until the boarding of the plane

- Transfer under escort: the applicant is accompanied by police forces up until the transfer to the authorities of the responsible state.

The modalities put in place to arrange transfers can vary from one prefecture to another. In the Rhône department, a refusal of voluntary transfer (refusal to accept the transfer upon notification) does not necessarily result in immediate administrative detention.

Finally with regards to transfers, it should be noted that the rate of actual implementation of transfers is strikingly low. Whereas the French authorities had received 3,919 agreements from other Member States to take charge or take back asylum seekers under the Dublin procedure in France, only 645 transfers have been carried out in practice (a 16.45% transfer rate) in 2013.<sup>83</sup>

A recent jurisprudence from the Council of State<sup>84</sup> is interesting with regards to the notion of absconding allowing Member States to extend the time limit for the execution of the transfer to a maximum of 18 months if the person concerned absconds (article 29.2 of the Dublin III regulation). In that case, considering that the prefecture had sent only one summon to M. and that M. had presented himself at the prefecture and had answered the prefect's letter by explaining that he did not have a stable housing, the Council of State has stated that M. cannot be considered as having systematically and intentionally escaped from the implementation of his return measure. The extension of the transfer period to 18 months was therefore unjustified, and the Court consequently stated that the Administrative Court of Lyon had lawfully ordered the Prefect to provide M. with a temporary residence permit with a view to lodge his asylum claim in France. This is important as statistics have shown an increase in the trend of resorting to such extensions (cases of transfer deadline extension represented 15% of Dublin cases in 2008 and 41% of the cases in 2013)<sup>85</sup>.

Concerning access to the asylum procedure upon return to France under the Dublin Regulation, these applications are treated in the same way as any other asylum applications. If the asylum seeker comes from a safe country of origin then their application is examined under the accelerated procedure. If the asylum application has already received a final negative decision from the National Asylum Court (CNDA), the asylum seeker may apply to OFPRA for a re-examination only if they possess new evidence (see section on subsequent application).

<sup>86</sup> See additional information in the French report of the European network for technical cooperation on the application of the Dublin II regulation .

Two types of appeals are available:

- An informal administrative appeal (recours gracieux<sup>87</sup>) can be lodged at the prefecture against the decision of placement in the Dublin procedure. Applicants receive a written reasoned response within four months. Appeals have succeeded when it was possible to identify the presence in France of family members who reside there legally or when elements of proof of a stay out of the European Union for 3 months can be provided. Actually, these appeals succeed for situations in which a Dublin procedure should not have been started in the first place (absence from the territory of the EU for more than 3 months)
- Court appeals: If the asylum seeker does not agree with the transfer decision, he may file a regular appeal against it before the administrative court within two months. In such cases, legal aid may be granted but the appeal does not carry a suspensive effect.

In addition, the appeal for interim measures in order to suspend an administrative decision (référé suspension<sup>88</sup>) enables the suspension of a transfer order in the event of an emergency and where there is serious doubt about the legality of the decision. According to French jurisprudence, a situation of emergency is generally granted when the claimant is actually detained in an administrative detention centre. Although processed relatively rapidly, appeals for interim measures do not have a suspensive effect during the examination of the claim.

We have little information on the outcome of the appeals before the administrative court since the applicants under the Dublin procedure are not accommodated in reception centres any longer after their initial departure date. It seems that transfer suspensions are rarely implemented, apart for cases that fall under the European Court on Human Rights or Council of State jurisprudence (as in the case of transfers to Greece for instance).

Personal Interview

Indicators:

- Is a personal interview of the asylum seeker conducted in practice in most cases in the Dublin procedure?  Yes  No
- If so, are interpreters available in practice, for interviews?  Yes  No

Asylum seekers under the Dublin procedure are not eligible for a temporary residence permit like the other asylum seekers.<sup>89</sup> They do not benefit from an examination of their application for asylum by OFPRA and therefore they do not have an interview on the substance of their application for asylum in France in the framework of this procedure. The merit of their asylum claim will be examined if France is designated as the responsible State at the end of the process.

There is no "interview" as such in the Dublin procedure in France. The claimants fill in a form (Dublinet or residence permit form) during an appointment at the prefecture to apply for a residence permit based on their submission of an asylum application<sup>90</sup>. Most of the time, NGOs do not attend those appointments so it is hard to know the details of its proceedings.

During this appointment, questions are asked about civil status, family of the applicant, modalities of entry into the French territory, countries through which the applicant possibly travelled prior to their asylum application, etc. This is when the applicants have the possibility to mention the presence of family members residing in another member state. These questions are asked by the officers at the desks in prefecture. All asylum seekers are affected by this process. The form is written in French and in English. It must be filled by the applicant in French, during the interview. The presence of an interpreter during this appointment can vary; the translation in the applicant's language is often done by a compatriot. Those appointments are not recorded. There is no transcript of the meeting.

In Lyon in March 2014, interviews still took place at the common desk of the prefecture (i.e. not in an office guaranteeing the confidentiality).

The form to apply for a residence permit has been adapted to match the standard form for determining the Member State responsible for examining an application for international protection (Annex I of the Commission Implementing regulation)<sup>91</sup>. Henceforth, it includes a section for the summary of the interview but practice so far has shown that this document is not handed over to the applicant. In March 2014, the common brochure of information imposed by the implementing regulation (Annex X) was still not handed over to applicants in prefectures.

Legal assistance

Indicators:

- Do asylum seekers have access to free legal assistance at the first instance in the Dublin procedure in practice?  Yes  not always/with difficulty  No
- Do asylum seekers have access to free legal assistance in the appeal procedure against a Dublin decision?  Yes  not always/with difficulty  No

Apart from cases where applicants under a Dublin procedure have access to reception facilities through the emergency scheme, they only have access to the legal assistance provided by the orientation platforms.

Access to legal aid can be obtained after the notification for transfer towards the responsible member state has been issued (upon conditions of low income). The applicants must request this allowance at the office for legal aid of the relevant administrative court (Tribunal administratif). This office can ask for further information and a short account of the legal and de facto reasons why the asylum seeker thinks the contested decision is unlawful or unfounded and may, for instance, lead to a violation of their fundamental rights. Access to legal aid can be refused if the arguments are deemed unfounded.

Suspension of transfers

Indicator:

- Are Dublin transfers systematically suspended as a matter of policy or as a matter of jurisprudence to one or more countries?  Yes  No
  - o If yes, to which country/countries? Greece

As a consequence of the European Court on Human Rights ruling of 21 January 2011 in MSS vs. Belgium and Greece, the Ministry of Interior has asked the Prefects to stop, on a temporary basis and awaiting further instructions, transfers towards Greece by a telegram dated 14 March 2011. Consequently, prefectures must apply the sovereignty clause of the Dublin Regulation and therefore declare France responsible for examining the asylum application.<sup>92</sup> As a general rule, applicants who should have been transferred to Greece according to the Dublin Regulation have a direct access to a temporary residence permit with a view to lodge their application for asylum in France. It happens sometimes however that the prefecture looks for another Member State which could be the next one responsible for the applicant (cases where Hungary was found to match one of the responsibility criteria for instance).

In addition, several times in 2013, the French administrative courts have suspended the transfer of asylum seekers under the Dublin regulation to Hungary. The Council of State has confirmed on 16 October 2013 an administrative court decision to suspend the transfer of a Mauritanian asylum seeker to Hungary, arguing that “bearing in mind the treatment this person had received during his detention at the Debrecen centre, there was a serious risk that his asylum application would not be examined by the Hungarian authorities in a way complying with the safeguards required by the respect for the right to asylum”.<sup>93</sup>

4. Admissibility procedures

In early 2014, the French legislation did not foresee a specific procedure to decide on the admissibility of the asylum claims (but see the specificity of the asylum procedure at the border). However, several discussions surrounding the consultation process for the reform of the French asylum law in 2014 indicate that an admissibility procedure could be put in place in France in a near future. The 2013 Touraine-Létard report indeed indicated that “admissibility procedures could be put in place, notably in relation to subsequent applications.”<sup>94</sup>

5. Border procedure (border and transit zones)

General (scope, time-limits)

Indicators:

- Do border authorities receive written instructions on the referral of asylum seekers to the competent authorities?  Yes  No
- Are there any reports (NGO reports, media, testimonies, etc) of people refused entry at the border and returned without examination of their protection needs?  Yes  No
- Can an application made at the border be examined in substance during a border procedure?  Yes  No

A specific procedure to request an admission into the country on asylum grounds is established in the French legislation,<sup>95</sup> for persons arriving on the French territory through airports or harbours. Nobody is exempt from the application of this procedure. Unaccompanied children are also subject to these provisions.<sup>96</sup> Foreign children do not have access to more favourable provisions than adults. An unaccompanied child may be held in a waiting area, as confirmed by a decision of the Court of Cassation of 2 May 2001, which ruled that the 1945 Ordinance<sup>97</sup> does not give any indication of the age of the persons that can be held in a waiting area. As a result, there is nothing to prevent children from being held there.<sup>98</sup> In the smaller waiting areas, unaccompanied children are therefore held together with adults, without any specific guarantees provided for them.

This procedure is framed by Article R 213-2 of Ceseda: When a foreign national who has arrived at the border makes a request for asylum, they are immediately informed, in a language they can reasonably be considered to understand, of the asylum request procedure, their rights and obligations over the course of this procedure, the potential consequences of any failure to meet these obligations or any refusal to cooperate with the authorities, and the measures available to help them present their request. Article L. 221-4 also provides that foreign nationals held in waiting areas are informed, as soon as possible, that they may request the assistance of an interpreter and/or a doctor, talk to a counsel or any other person of their choice, and leave the waiting area at any point for any destination outside of France. This information is communicated in a language the person understands.

The asylum request must imperatively be taken into account and the Border Police has to take a statement of the request for an admission on the basis of an asylum claim. The person is held in the waiting area for an initial duration of 4 calendar days<sup>99</sup> to give the authorities some time to check that the asylum request is not manifestly unfounded. This procedure is separate from and prior to the procedure for recognition of refugee status, which cannot begin until the asylum seeker at the border enters French territory.<sup>100</sup>

The Judge of Freedom and Detention (JLD) is competent to rule on extending the stay in the waiting area<sup>101</sup>. The JLD must rule "within twenty-four hours of submission of the case, or if necessary, within forty-eight hours of this, after a hearing with the interested party or their lawyer if they have one".<sup>102</sup> It is the administrative authority that must make a request to the JLD to extend custody in the waiting area and who must explain the reasons for this (impossible to return the foreign national due to lack of identity documents, pending asylum request, etc.).

The duration of the stay in the waiting area can be up to 20 calendar days (26 days in exceptional cases). According to the official figures of the Ministry of the Interior, in 2011 the average duration of the stay in the waiting areas were 3.5 days at Roissy CDG and 1.9 days at Orly. This means that many foreigners are returned before having been able to present their situation before the judge.<sup>103</sup>

There is no set period between registering the request and the interview, although in practice it is often very short (one or two days). The Border Police at Roissy (Charles de Gaulle) airport have indicated to the NGO ANAFE that any person wishing to make a request at the airport, when they are refused entry, must explicitly use the word "asylum" for their request to be registered at this stage. A new "rules of procedure" document is being drafted to harmonise the practices of the border police throughout the country. .

The decision on whether an asylum request is manifestly unfounded is made by the Ministry for Interior. This decision is taken after having consulted the opinion delivered by OFPRA (Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless Person)'s Border Division. In 2013, the asylum requests made at the border have seen their lowest level in the past 10 years with only 1 346 registrations of requests to enter the French territory on the grounds of an asylum claim (including 49 requests from unaccompanied minors).

Top 5 nationalities of asylum seekers at the border in 2013 were Congolese (DRC) (7.8%), Nigerians (6.4%), Malians (6%), Camerounians (5.2%) and Guineans (4.7%).<sup>104</sup>

The competent administrative authority for delimiting waiting areas is the Prefect of the Département and in Paris, the Préfet de Police (Chief of Police). The decision to hold a foreign national in the waiting area, which must be justified in writing, is taken by the Head of the National Police service or the Customs and Border Police, or by a civil servant designated by them. In August 2012, there were 51 waiting areas in mainland France and overseas. Most of the activities takes place at the Roissy CDG airport<sup>105</sup> (it concentrates 81.7% of all opinions).

During the border procedure, asylum seekers are held within waiting areas. Waiting areas are located between the arrival and departure points and passport control. The law provides that they may include, within or close to the station, port or airport, or next to an arrival area, one or several places for accommodation, offering hotel-type facilities to the foreign nationals concerned. In these accommodation areas, there should be an area for lawyers to hold confidential meetings with the foreign nationals<sup>106</sup>. Besides, since the modification of the asylum law (Ceseda) of 16 June 2011, waiting areas can be extended within 10km from a border crossing point, when it is found that a group of at least 10 foreigners just crossed the border. The group of 10 can have been identified on a same location or various locations within the 10km area. This exceptional extended waiting area can be maintained for a maximum of 26 days.<sup>107</sup> This possibility has not been implemented until now.

According to the law, waiting areas can include "hotel type" accommodation areas. In practice, those are only established in the Roissy CDG airport (ZAPI 3) and can accommodate up to 160 persons. In the other waiting areas, the material conditions for accommodation can vary greatly: foreign nationals are sometimes accommodated in a nearby hotel (like in Orly at night time), or in rooms within police stations. They do not all have access to "hotel-type" services.<sup>108</sup>

The Border division of OFPRA formulates an opinion that is communicated to the Ministry of Interior, which takes the final decision to authorise entry into France or not. In theory, the authority in charge of checking whether the asylum request is manifestly unfounded should only examine whether the given facts are manifestly irrelevant to the criteria of the Geneva Convention, or the criteria used to grant subsidiary protection. This review could resemble a procedure to verify admissibility. It should only be a superficial review, not an in-depth one, of the asylum request. In practice, the assessment usually covers the verification of the credibility of the account (interview reports contain comments as to stereotypical, imprecise or incoherent accounts, with a lack of written proof). This practice of examining the request on the merits is extremely problematic. If the asylum request is not considered to be manifestly unfounded, the foreign national is authorised to enter the French territory and is given an 8-day temporary visa (safe passage). Within this time frame, upon a request from the asylum seeker, the competent prefectures will grant a temporary permit to remain, allowing the asylum seeker to lodge their asylum request to OFPRA. Refusals entail the removal<sup>109</sup> of the foreign national, usually to their country of origin (in application of annex 9 of the Chicago Convention).

Unaccompanied children held in waiting areas are subject to the same procedure. According to Human Rights Watch<sup>110</sup>, this system "leaves children facing the risk that their asylum claims will not receive appropriate consideration or that their deportation will be improperly expedited".

Any refusal should be accompanied with an argued decision by the Ministry of Interior. The deadline for the decision is not set out in the legislation. In practice, in 2013, 98% of the opinions had been delivered in less than 96 hours.<sup>111</sup> In 2008, the rate of positive opinions given by OFPRA decreased significantly compared with that of 2007, from 44.6% to 31.1%. This trend was confirmed in 2009 (26.8%) and 2010 (25.8%) and reinforced in 2011 with a dramatic drop in 2011 to only 10.1% of positive opinions.<sup>112</sup> In 2013, 17% of the requests have benefited from a positive opinion and a right to enter the French territory with a view to lodge and asylum request.

Appeal

Indicators:

- Does the law provide for an appeal against a decision taken in a border procedure?
  - Yes                       No
  - o if yes, is the appeal         judicial                 administrative
  - o If yes, is it suspensive?  Yes                       No

The appeal process for a border procedure differs significantly from appeals in a regular procedure. When the request for asylum made at the border is rejected, the foreign national is considered to be "not admitted" into French territory. They then have 48 hours (during which they cannot be returned) to make an appeal to the Administrative Court to overturn the decision. This appeal has suspensive effect.<sup>113</sup> The provisions concerning the period available to the administrative judge to decide on the appeal have evolved recently<sup>114</sup>: the decisions must henceforth be delivered at a hearing.<sup>115</sup>

Indeed since January 2012, asylum seekers are informed on the day of the hearing about the decision of the appeal court. However, sometimes they only receive the reasoned decision of the court on their appeal several days later, provided they have not been returned beforehand. No other appeal can be made against the decision to refuse entry on the basis of asylum (except for appeals for the implementation of provisional measures, based on Article 39 of the European Convention on Human Rights). The foreign national may request the services of an interpreter from the President of the Court and can be assisted by a lawyer if they have one. They may ask the President of the Court to designate one. The decision of this Administrative Court can be challenged within fifteen days before the President of the competent Administrative Court of Appeal. This appeal does not have suspensive effect.

During 2012, Forum Réfugiés-Cosi noticed a change in practice for designating the competent Administrative Court for the appeal. Based on "considerations of the proper application of justice", the Council of State assigns the case to the Administrative Court that is closest to the concerned waiting area<sup>116</sup> and not anymore only to the administrative court of Paris.

There are many practical obstacles for lodging appeals effectively at the border. Modalities for the implementation of appeals are too restrictive for most foreign nationals held in waiting areas, who should in principle have access to an effective appeal procedure. Although it has suspensive effect, this appeal is very difficult to carry out because it has to be made within 48 hours, with a legal justification, in French, otherwise it might be rejected without a hearing by the Administrative Court. Language is an important obstacle to lodge an appeal, as there is no free interpreting service available in the waiting area. ANAFE and other NGOs such as Forum Réfugiés-Cosi rely on some volunteer interpreters but they are not always available<sup>117</sup>. There is no “on duty” lawyers systems in the waiting area and, in most waiting areas, NGOs try to provide a legal advice telephone service. Besides, as the procedure for examining asylum requests at the border is so poorly defined, arguments linked to an infringement of the procedure are difficult to substantiate. The justification for the appeal therefore has to be based on the demonstration that the asylum request is well-founded in order to challenge the ministerial motivation. The NGO ANAFE has denounced the illusory nature of the effectiveness of this suspensive appeal in a report published in January 2014.<sup>118</sup> According to them, the modalities of the appeal are far too restrictive and there is an accumulation of serious material difficulties: difficult access to a phone, lack of copy machines, difficulties to obtain the summary of the OFPRA interview. Finally, the 48-hour period starts from the time of notification of the rejection decision. Beyond this strict deadline, no other appeal is possible (with the exception of appeals to the European Court on Human Rights). Some notifications of rejection are made in the middle of the night, which means that by the time the asylum seekers are able to contact a lawyer or speak with advisers, the time available is drastically reduced.<sup>119</sup>

The NGO ANAFE has publicly denounced in December 2013 the case of an Eritrean asylum seeker, whom the Border police has tried to board on a plane to Bahrain within the 48 hour period after the rejection of his asylum claim by OFPRA and therefore disregarded his right to lodge an appeal to the administrative court.<sup>120</sup>

Finally, two locations for “off site” appeal hearings have been discussed vividly in France in autumn 2013. Indeed a hearing room has opened in September in the administrative detention centre of Le Mesnil-Amelot (near Paris) and another one was planned to be used in the waiting area of Paris-Charles de Gaulle airport as of January 2014. The authorities had justified the relocation of these appeal hearings explaining that it will avoid costly transfers, sometimes conducted in conditions, which do not respect the dignity of the persons concerned. Many NGOs<sup>121</sup> have raised concerns with regards to this initiative as it gives the impression that foreigners are not appellants like any other. The Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights, Nils Muižnieks has sent a letter to the Justice Minister, Ms Christiane Taubira, on 2 October 2013, in which he mentioned that “these off-site” proceedings entail holding hearings in the immediate proximity of a place of deprivation of liberty, in which the applicants are being held or detained. This situation, combined with the fact that this place is under the authority of the Ministry of the Interior, which is also a party to the proceedings, could undermine the independence and impartiality of the court concerned, at least in the eyes of the applicants”<sup>122</sup>.

On 15 October 2013, the Justice Minister has responded to these concerns by setting-up an enquiry mission in charge of determining if the off-site hearing room located at Roissy airport is complying with European and national obligations.<sup>123</sup>

The two rapporteurs (Bernard Bacou, former president of the administrative appeal court of Aix en Provence and Jacqueline de Guillenchmidt, former member of the Constitutional council) have handed over their conclusions to the Justice Minister on 17 December who has immediately announced the freezing of the opening of the site in the waiting area of Paris-Charles de Gaulle airport. The report does not challenge the necessity to have the judges come to the airport but stresses that several changes have to be made to respect the migrants’ rights: for instance the door between the court and the waiting area needs to be walled up and the control the hearing should not be carried out by the border police.<sup>124</sup> The Justice Minister will start discussions with the ministry of interior on these issues. Some NGOs like

Indicators:

- Is a personal interview of the asylum seeker conducted in practice in most cases in a border procedure?  Yes  No
  - o If yes, is the personal interview limited to questions relating to nationality, identity and travel route?  Yes  No
- If so, are interpreters available in practice, for interviews?  Yes  No
- Are personal interviews ever conducted through video conferencing?  Yes  No

This procedure is very different from the regular procedure. All asylum seekers subject to a border procedure are interviewed by the border section of OFPRA (French Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless Persons, French determining authorities) so that it can provide the Ministry of Interior with an opinion on whether their request is well-founded or not (this opinion is not binding for the Ministry).

In 2013, 1 346 requests have been registered in waiting areas and 1 262 opinions have been delivered on an admission to the French territory on asylum grounds.<sup>126</sup> OFPRA gave a positive decision in only 17% of these 1 262 cases.<sup>127</sup>

The law sets provisions on interviews in the border procedure: “If the interview of the asylum seeker requires the assistance of an interpreter, it is paid for by the state. This interview is subject to a written report which includes information related to the identity of the foreign national and that of their family, the places and countries they travelled through or stayed in, their nationality(ies), or at least the countries they have lived in and any previous asylum requests, their identity documents and travel documents, as well as the reason why they are seeking international protection.”<sup>128</sup> At Roissy CDG airport, the OFPRA Border section interviews the asylum seeker in the waiting area (ZAPI3). With the exception of the Roissy CDG airport waiting area the interviews are done by phone, with translation provided by an interpreter who is included in the phone call. An interpreter has been resorted to in 49.3% of the interviews in 2013<sup>129</sup>.

These interviews should be very different to the interviews in the regular procedure, as they are only supposed to look at whether the given facts are manifestly irrelevant to the criteria set out in the Geneva Convention, or the criteria used to grant subsidiary protection. In practice, the review is often extended to include the verification of the credibility of the account (some rejection decisions contain reports of stereotypical, imprecise or incoherent accounts, with a lack of written proof).<sup>130</sup> It can happen sometimes that the interview questions are disproportionately inferring answers that would support a “manifestly unfounded” finding (for instance, as reported by a volunteer of Forum réfugiés-Cosi, an Ivory Coast national had been asked in 2014: “So you wanted to leave your country because of the difficult economic situation?”).

<sup>130</sup> The association ANAFE has been able to attend a few OFPRA interviews at the border in Summer 2013. More information will shortly be available on their website.

Besides, the Border police itself acknowledges that not all unaccompanied children in the Roissy airport waiting area are assisted by a legal representative (Administrateur Ad-Hoc) as the law provides:<sup>131</sup> in 2009, 584 unaccompanied children were assisted by a legal representative out of 637 identified and in 2010 there were 370 on a total of 518 to have met a legal representative.<sup>132</sup>

According to the 2014 Human Rights Watch report on unaccompanied children detained at the French border (covering all unaccompanied minors, not only asylum seekers), some children are left without assistance during key moments as the system “still lacks sufficient government funding to meet the requirements of guardianship laid out by the Committee on the Rights of the Child. When large numbers of children arrive, or when children arrive on weekends or holidays, there can be delays in assigning guardians.”<sup>133</sup>

Finally, the interview notes are only provided at the same time as the rejection decision. In the waiting areas of Orly airport and outside Paris, the OFPRA protection officer now asks during the telephone interview whether the asylum seeker would like the interview report to be sent to them personally by e-mail or whether they would prefer it to be sent directly to their lawyer, or as a last resort, to the Border Police fax machine.<sup>134</sup> Sending the report like this does not guarantee the confidentiality of the information and it is contrary to the law,<sup>135</sup> which states that OFPRA should send the foreign national a copy of the report in a sealed envelope.

In a decision of 28 November 2011, the Council of State also clarified that the 48-hour deadline to lodge appeals does not begin until the OFPRA report is received by the asylum seeker in a sealed envelope as provided by the law (however, “failure to transmit this report, if it is an obstacle to the initiation of the appeal deadline, and the automatic execution of the ministerial decision to refuse entry on the basis of asylum, has no influence on the legality of this decision”<sup>136</sup>).

Legal assistance

Indicators:

- Do asylum seekers have access to free legal assistance at first instance in the border procedure in practice?  Yes  not always/with difficulty  No
- Do asylum seekers have access to free legal assistance in the appeal procedure against a decision taken under a border procedure?  Yes  not always/with difficulty  No

There is no permanent legal adviser or NGO presence in the French waiting areas.<sup>137</sup> Asylum seekers must therefore try to get hold of an adviser by phone from the waiting area. Many concerns have been raised about effective access to a telephone.<sup>138</sup> These difficulties have also been highlighted by the Controller General of places of freedom deprivation: “In waiting areas, there are telephones generally in good condition, but without any explanation on how to use them through posters or information within the documents provided to the foreign national. These telephones can only be used by purchasing phone cards, and therefore, by those who have money to buy one.”<sup>139</sup> No legal adviser is present during the OFPRA<sup>140</sup> (French Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless people) interview (the only exception for the presence of a third party is the presence of legal representatives for unaccompanied children).

Article 213-9 of Ceseda outlines the possibility of receiving assistance from a lawyer or asking the President of the Court to designate an appointed lawyer for appeals to the Administrative Court against a decision to refuse entry to French territory on the basis of asylum. The asylum seekers can request to be assisted by a court appointed lawyer during their hearing before the Judge of Liberties and Detention (JLD) competent to rule on extending their stay in the waiting area. In theory, the asylum seeker should have hired one previously at their own expense, or prepared a sufficiently well-argued request in French by themselves, in terms of facts and points of law. This is another illusory measure that does not guarantee the asylum seeker access to an effective remedy.

The NGO ANAFE denounces the fact that these cases are handled in haste by the court appointed lawyers. Indeed, due to the urgency of the appeal and to the functioning of the administrative courts, the court appointed lawyers have in reality often access to all the elements of the case only once they meet the asylum seeker at the court, meaning in the best case scenario one hour before the start of the hearing. Under these conditions, it is difficult for the lawyer to know the story of the person held in the waiting area and to provide a good appeal.<sup>141</sup>

The General Controller of places of freedom deprivation has recommended in his 2013 report that the law should be amended to take into account some essential principles. For instance, he argues that it should foresee not a “space” for lawyers but should ensure that the material framework guarantees the confidentiality attached to the mission of counselling to third country nationals held in the waiting areas.<sup>142</sup>

6. Accelerated procedures

General (scope, grounds for accelerated procedures, time limits)

The reasons for placing an asylum seeker in an accelerated procedure are outlined in Article L 741-4 of CESEDA. This procedure can be applied if:

- the foreign national seeking asylum is a national of a country for which Article 1.C.5 of the Geneva Convention applies, or a country considered to be a safe country of origin (33.6% of the accelerated procedures in 2013 imposed on first asylum claims were justified by the fact that the person came from a safe country of origin<sup>143</sup>).
- the presence of the foreign national in France constitutes a serious threat to public order, public safety or state security.
- the asylum request is based on a deliberate fraud or constitutes an abuse of the asylum procedure, or has only been made to prevent a notified or imminent return order. Abuse of the asylum procedure is constituted in particular by the fraudulent presentation of several requests to remain on asylum grounds under different identities. An asylum request based on deliberate fraud is constituted by a request made by a foreign national who provides false information, hides information about their identity, their nationality or their journey into France, in order to deceive the authorities.

<sup>140</sup> This is also the case for cases heard at OFPRA in the procedures on the territory.

There is no system in place for exemption from the application of the accelerated procedure - even for vulnerable persons. Elderly or disabled people can also be placed under an accelerated procedure (and are therefore given less favourable reception conditions).

Legally, the provisions that allow for placement in an accelerated procedure are indicative only and they can be bypassed by the Prefectures who have to carry out an individual assessment of the person's situation.<sup>144</sup> For example, very occasionally, in the case of multiple nationalities in a single family, the Rhône department Prefecture grants temporary leave to remain even though one of the family members originates from a safe country of origin. However, the 2013 OFPRA activity report clearly demonstrates a wide use of accelerated procedures for asylum seekers coming from countries listed as safe countries of origin<sup>145</sup> (91.5% of these requests are treated under the accelerated procedure<sup>146</sup>).

OFPRA (French Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless Persons) is the authority responsible for the decision at first instance in accelerated procedures. Its decisions should in theory be made within 15 calendar days.<sup>147</sup> In 2013, the median period for the examination of first asylum requests in accelerated procedure was 55 days.<sup>148</sup>

The accelerated procedure represented 25.6% of the total of asylum cases in 2013. This is a 10% decrease in comparison to 2012. Placements under an accelerated procedure often result from the use of the safe country of origin concept, from evaluations carried out by the authorities that the requests are abusive (suspected falsification of identity) and from the frequent use of the accelerated procedure for asylum requests lodged from administrative detention centres.

With regard to administrative detention, UNHCR declared that "the conditions for exercising the right to asylum cannot be considered to be effective. The deadline of 5 days to formulate a request when detained (UNHCR recommends an extension to 10 days), the fact that the request has to be written in French without the availability of an interpreter, the 96-hour deadline for OFPRA to make a decision (which is often not respected by OFPRA, particularly for complex cases, which shows its unsuitability) are just some examples."<sup>149</sup>

Indicators:

- Does the law provide for an appeal against a decision taken in an accelerated procedure?
  - Yes  No
  - o if yes, is the appeal:  judicial  administrative
  - o If yes, is it suspensive?  Yes  No

The procedure for appeal before the CNDA (National Court of Asylum) is similar to the one in the regular procedure. Persons placed in an accelerated procedure must appeal within the same time period - 1 month after the negative decision. As the preparation of these appeals is hardly supported by NGOs (assistance to draft the appeal was removed from the mandate of the orientation platforms by the new reference framework in 2011), asylum seekers may not be aware of these deadlines and face serious difficulties to draft a well-argued appeal. They can nonetheless lodge a request to benefit from legal aid (aide juridictionnelle).

One difference with serious consequences is the lack of suspensive effect of the appeal in the accelerated procedure on a return decision given jointly with a negative decision on the asylum claim. Some Prefectures systematically order returns with compulsory removal orders from France, after OFPRA has rejected an asylum seeker placed in an accelerated procedure (even if in reality the removal orders are not always implemented). In any case, the risk and the fear of being arrested and returned restrict the freedom of movement of these asylum seekers, and limit their possibility of receiving assistance with the preparation of their appeal. Stressing the potentially grave consequences of a removal before a final decision on an asylum request, Forum réfugiés-Cosi has for many years called for a suspensive appeal for all asylum seekers, regardless of the procedure imposed on them.

In its submission for the Universal Periodic Review of the situation in France by the Human Rights Council in 2013, the UNHCR strongly recommended "the introduction of suspensive effect to appeals at a legislative and regulatory level, in order to make the appeals effective for accelerated procedures, and called for a more limited application of the conditions leading to accelerated procedures, particularly on the basis of the safe country of origin concept."<sup>150</sup>

Until the end of 2013, the CNDA was making the interpretation that both the provisions of Article 1A (2) of the Geneva Convention and the provisions of Article 2 of the EU Qualification Directive implied that asylum seekers seeking protection must necessarily be outside their country of origin. Therefore, it used to consider that the involuntary returns of applicants to their countries of origin had the effect of temporarily suspending the examination of their cases as, under these circumstances, their appeals were temporarily groundless. However, the Council of State has stated in its judgment of 6 December 2013 that no disposition of the Geneva Convention nor of the Ceseda subordinates the examination of the appeal at the CNDA to a presence on the French territory during the appeal procedure. A residence outside of the French territory is therefore not a reason not to examine the appeal lodged by an asylum seeker.<sup>151</sup>

The actual impact of this jurisprudence may however be limited in practice. If the right to appeal is to be from now on formally respected and asylum seekers who have left the country will henceforth get a decision from the CNDA, their absence at the hearing may compromise the chances of success of the request. Indeed, asylum seekers who have been forcibly removed from the territory will most likely find it difficult to come back<sup>152</sup> to France to comply with a Court's obligation of appearance at the hearing and will not get a residence permit to do so in any case. These asylum seekers therefore have a high risk of seeing their application rejected.<sup>153</sup>

<sup>152</sup> In addition, one can imagine that it will be difficult for them to be kept informed about such a summon in any case.

<sup>153</sup> And even if the decision is positive, it is unlikely that they will manage to flee their country once again. ## Personal Interview

Indicators:

- Is a personal interview of the asylum seeker conducted in most cases in practice in an accelerated procedure?  Yes  No
  - o If yes, is the personal interview limited to questions relating to nationality, identity and travel route?  Yes  No
- If so, are interpreters available in practice, for interviews?  Yes  No
- Are personal interviews ever conducted through video conferencing?
 Frequently  Rarely  Never

Interviews for asylum seekers placed in an accelerated procedure take place under the same conditions as interviews in a regular procedure. The same grounds for omission apply. For first asylum requests processed under the accelerated procedure (excluding subsequent applications), 98% of the applicants were called for an interview in 2013.<sup>154</sup>

All personal interviews in the regular procedure are conducted by the authority responsible for taking decisions on asylum applications (OFPRA). At the end of the interview, the protection officer writes an account and a proposition of decision which is then submitted to the validation of their section manager. There is no audio recording of the initial interviews. The report produced is not a verbatim report of the interview. The problems arising from the quality of the reports and of the interpretation are also true of accelerated procedures.

Legal assistance

Indicators:

- Do asylum seekers have access to free legal assistance at first instance in accelerated procedures in practice?  Yes  not always/with difficulty  No
- Do asylum seekers have access to free legal assistance in the appeal procedure against a decision taken under an accelerated procedure?  Yes  not always/with difficulty  No

In theory, asylum seekers placed in an accelerated procedure have the same rights with regard to access to legal assistance than in a regular procedure. In reality, the specific situation of persons placed under an accelerated procedure arises from the difficulty they have in accessing reception conditions where legal assistance is available. As they do not usually have access to the CADAs (asylum seekers' reception centres), these persons are dependent on legal advice provided by the initial orientation platforms (limited to the preparation of the official form to lodge an asylum application) and must rely on volunteers from charities. The initial orientation platforms are only supposed to explain the procedure for requesting legal aid (aide juridictionnelle – available only at the appeal stage). With little support with their request, and often living in extremely precarious conditions, these persons may find it difficult to obtain a positive response from the Legal Aid Office (some requested documents are not easily accessible for people living in emergency shelters). These appeals can appear to have little merit as they are written without any legal assistance.

C. Information for asylum seekers and access to NGOs and UNHCR

Indicators:

- Is sufficient information provided to asylum seekers on the procedures in practice?  Yes  not always/with difficulty  No
- Is sufficient information provided to asylum seekers on their rights and obligations in practice?  Yes  not always/with difficulty  No
- Do asylum seekers located at the border have effective access to NGOs and UNHCR if they wish so in practice?  Yes  not always/with difficulty  No
- Do asylum seekers in detention centres have effective access to NGOs and UNHCR if they wish so in practice?  Yes  not always/with difficulty  No
- Do asylum seekers accommodated in remote locations on the territory (excluding borders) have effective access to NGOs and UNHCR if they wish so in practice?  Yes  not always/with difficulty  No

The provision of information is codified by article R-751-2 of Ceseda: "The competent service of the Prefecture must inform the foreign national who would like to request refugee or subsidiary protection, of the asylum procedure, their rights and obligations over the course of this procedure, the potential consequences of failure to meet these obligations or any refusal to cooperate with the authorities and the measures available to them to help them present their request. This information should be provided in a language they can reasonably be expected to understand."

A guide is supposed to be provided within the Prefecture and is available in several languages (the 2011 Asylum Seekers Guide was available in French, Albanian, English, Arabic, Armenian, Bengali, Chinese, Haitian, Creole, Spanish, Georgian, Lingala, Mongol, Urdu, Pashto, Farsi, Portuguese, Romanian, Russian, Serbian, Swahili, Tamil, Chechen, Tigrinya, Turkish, and Vietnamese). This document has been updated in June 2013 and available on the Ministry of the Interior website (only in French at the moment)<sup>155</sup>. Practices vary from one Prefecture to another, and many still fail to provide the guide. In addition, a leaflet with information about the issue of "domiciliation" (legal address) is handed out in some orientation platforms (as in Lyon for instance). According to the national consultative committee on Human rights this information brochure has not always been effectively distributed within the Prefectures.<sup>156</sup> Furthermore, the European Agency for Fundamental Rights highlighted the inadequacy of information for asylum seekers in France in 2010, at the time of its thematic report on "The duty to inform applicants about the asylum procedure: the asylum seekers' perspective".<sup>157</sup>

OFPPA has published in April 2014 a guide on the right of asylum for unaccompanied minors in France.<sup>158</sup> The guide is quite comprehensive, describing the steps of the asylum procedure, the appeals and the procedure at the border. OFPPA has stated its intention to share this guide as widely as possible in prefectures, in waiting areas at the border and with stakeholders working in children's care. With regards to the information provided about the Dublin procedure, it varies greatly from one Prefecture to another. In the Rhône department, the asylum seeker knows when a take charge or a take back procedure has been initiated, due the information provided on the back of their Dublin summons (information translated into the language of the asylum seeker). There is, however, no information about the country to which a request has been sent, nor on the criteria that have led to this decision. The leaflets drawn up by the European Commission for the implementation of the Dublin III regulation were not yet provided to asylum seekers in early 2014.

Research carried out in 2012 within the framework of the DIASP (Assessing the Dublin Regulation's impact on asylum seekers' access to protection and identifying best practice implementation in the European Union) project<sup>159</sup> has demonstrated that many asylum seekers under a Dublin procedure clearly fall through the cracks of the provision of information. Many interviewees said that the state authorities did not provide with information when they asked for it. Besides, it appears from the interviewees' answers that the simple provision of leaflets does not alleviate the feeling of misinformation. They have identified diverse reasons for the difficulties to get the right information: complexity of the procedures, scarcity of the information given, stressful circumstances and language barriers.<sup>160</sup>

In administrative detention centres, the Controller General of places of freedom deprivation had indicated once again in 2011 that while current regulations state that persons detained should be informed in advance of their departure, the absence of prior warning is current standard practice, and information is exceptional.<sup>161</sup>

French law regulates strictly the access of asylum seekers to NGOs in administrative detention centres (CRAs). Some NGOs have a quasi-permanent presence (5-6 days a week) in CRAs as part of their mission to provide information to foreign nationals, and to help them to exercise their rights as outlined in Article R. 553-14 of CESEDA. In 2012, these included La Cimade, l'Ordre de Malte, Forum Réfugiés-Cosi, France Terre d'Asile and ASSFAM. Several other persons can access the CRAs facilities. Some people benefit from a free access (the Human Rights Commissioner of the Council of Europe, members of the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, Members of the French and European Parliaments, the Controller General of Places of Freedom deprivation, Prefects, State Prosecutors and the Judges for Liberty and Detention) while others have more limited access (Consular representatives, lawyers, family members of the persons held). In addition, by a decision of 1 March 2013,<sup>162</sup> the Ministry of the Interior established the list of accredited NGOs that can nominate representatives to access the administrative detention facilities. Two NGOs are currently accredited: Forum réfugiés-Cosi and France Terre d'asile. UNHCR does not have access to CRAs.

The Controller General of places of freedom deprivation has also highlighted in 2013 some deficiencies with regards to the information provided to asylum seekers while in administration detention. His recommendations included: to make compulsory the dissemination of explanatory brochures about the asylum procedure (in several languages) addressing persons in detention and staff working in detention centres; to insist on the mandatory nature of the transmission of the asylum claim to OFPRA, even if it is submitted late; and to ensure that an interpreter is at the disposal of asylum seekers assisting them with the procedure.<sup>163</sup>

It should be noted that in October 2012, the association Reporters without Borders challenged the rejection of the request to access CRAs that they made to the Ministry of the Interior on 27 February, as part of the Open Access campaign. The association, like all French journalists who had made such a request in France, was denied access to the centres, without any reason being given.<sup>164</sup> In 2013 however, several journalists were able to visit certain administrative detention centres together with French MEPs in occasion of the Open Access visits.<sup>165</sup> Other visits have taken place later in the year, such as in the administrative detention centre of Nice on 30 October 2013. The Ministry of Interior is currently examining the possibility of a decree allowing journalists to access all places of deprivation of liberty when accompanying members of the Parliament. The Minister of Interior had announced that the decree would be released rapidly after his press conference on 31st January 2014.<sup>166</sup>

In the waiting zones at the border, Forum Réfugiés-Cosi notes a serious lack of information on the possibility of requesting admission to French territory on the basis of asylum (see Border Procedures, General section). When a person is arrested at the border, they are notified of an entry refusal, in theory with the presence of an interpreter if necessary.<sup>167</sup> However, many stakeholders doubt that the information provided and the rights listed therein are effectively understood. For example, it is very surprising to note that those intercepted nearly all agree to renounce their right to a “clear day” notice period (24 hours during which the person cannot be returned) and tick the box confirming their request to leave as soon as possible. The Controller General of places of freedom deprivation stated that his officers “noticed that the decision to renounce this right is often taken by the agents themselves without the person held even being informed of this in any intelligible way.”<sup>168</sup> In reality, according to witness statements collected by the NGO ANAFE, information on rights and their effective application differs from one person to another and depends on the goodwill of the Border Police officer, on any difficulties that may arise with interpretation, and also on the ability of the person concerned to understand the situation.<sup>169</sup>

In 2014, the Controller General of places of freedom deprivation has recommended that the notification of the “clear day” should be recorded in a distinct official report (proces verbal), countersigned by the third-country national. Alternatively, the “clear day” period during which no return can be carried out could be implemented automatically (unless the third country national expressly wants to be returned).<sup>170</sup>

In addition, as the telephone in certain waiting areas is not free of charge, contact with NGOs or even UNHCR, who are on the outside, is not easy. Several decisions by the Courts of Appeal have highlighted the irregularity of the procedure for administrative detention in a waiting area, due to the restrictions placed on exercising the right to communicate with a lawyer or any person of one’s choice.<sup>171</sup> The fact that asylum seekers may have no financial means of purchasing a phone card is therefore a restriction on this fundamental right.

The list of the NGOs accredited to send representatives to access the waiting areas was established by order of the Ministry of the Interior on 5 June 2012:<sup>172</sup> it includes Accueil aux médecins et personnels de santé réfugiés en France (APSR- Reception of Refugee Medical and Healthcare Staff in France), Amnesty International France, L’Association nationale d’assistance aux frontières pour les étrangers (ANAFE National Association for the Assistance of Foreigners at the Borders), La Cimade, the French Red Cross, France Terre d’asile, Forum réfugiés-Cosi, Groupe accueil et solidarité (GAS-Reception and

D. Subsequent applications

Indicators:

- Does the legislation provide for a specific procedure for subsequent applications?
 Yes       No
- Is a removal order suspended during the examination of a first subsequent application?
  - o At first instance       Yes       No       Not systematically
  - o At the appeal stage       Yes       No       Not systematically
- Is a removal order suspended during the examination of a second, third, subsequent application?
  - o At first instance       Yes       No       Not systematically
  - o At the appeal stage       Yes       No       Not systematically

After the rejection of an asylum request by the CNDA (National Court of Asylum), it is possible to ask OFPRA (French Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless Persons) to re-examine the request if there is "new evidence", subsequent to the date of the CNDA decision or prior to this date but which the asylum seeker only learned subsequently, and which is of a nature to justify personal fears of persecution or the risk of serious threats arising if the person returns. This new evidence must be proven and relevant, and able to demonstrate that the request is well-founded.<sup>173</sup> OFPRA has registered 5790 subsequent requests in 2013 (a 7% decrease in comparison to 2012).

The asylum seeker must again request, at the prefecture, a temporary residence permit. In order to obtain one, the person will have to convince the prefecture that he has credible new evidence to present to OFPRA.

- o If the Prefecture considers there are new elements, it grants temporary residence permit for 15 days, and provides the OFPRA re-examination request form. The asylum seeker then has 8 days to submit all the details of the case to OFPRA, who registers it and decides whether to admit the request for re-examination.
- o If the Prefecture considers the request does not provide new elements, it refuses to grant temporary residence permit and places the person in an accelerated procedure (it has been the case for 88% of the subsequent requests lodged in 2013<sup>174</sup>). It then provides a form to be completed as well as a summons to return to the Prefecture headquarters within 15 days, with all the details of the case in a sealed envelope. As soon as the re-examination file is received, the Prefecture sends it to OFPRA, with a message to indicate its urgency.

A removal order that may have been issued at the end of the first asylum request will be suspended during the examination of the subsequent application, but only at first instance if the person has been placed in an accelerated procedure.

However, the circular of 1 April 2011<sup>175</sup> invites the Prefects to reject requests for temporary residence permit almost systematically for re-examination cases.

There is no preliminary examination of the admissibility of the re-examination request as such. However, in practice, the discretion given to the Prefectures to decide on the validity of subsequent request is problematic. In practice, the Prefectures, by deciding if the new information is pertinent or not and by placing the asylum seekers in accelerated procedures, are acting as a kind of preliminary filter.

In the first place, OFPRA rules on the basis of the evidence provided, on the admissibility of subsequent request. During this preliminary examination, OFPRA can decide not to proceed with an interview and reject the re-examination request. If it is admitted, the asylum seeker is summoned for an interview.

In the event that OFPRA rejects the subsequent request, it is possible to appeal to the CNDA<sup>176</sup> within a time period of 1 month, on points of law and facts. If the re-examination request is processed under an accelerated procedure at OFPRA, the CNDA appeal does not have suspensive effect on a return decision. According to the law, "legal aid may not be requested for an appeal against an OFPRA decision to reject a subsequent request when the claimant has, at the time of the previous request, had a hearing with this office, as well as with the CNDA, assisted by a lawyer designated under the legal aid system."<sup>177</sup> Rejected asylum seekers who make a subsequent request are not or are no longer accommodated in reception centres. They therefore live in extremely precarious conditions that are not conducive to writing a well-constructed re-examination request, and they no longer receive assistance from specialised NGOs working in reception centres or in orientation platforms (they rely on volunteers working for charities). It is also difficult to provide new information and to prove their authenticity. These people often have difficulties in accessing the documents needed to prove the new information (difficulty in contacting their country of origin to obtain the evidence). In practice, asylum seekers under a re-examination procedure often do not get a hearing – only 6% of them had been called for an interview at OFPRA in 2013<sup>178</sup>. Indeed, decisions of rejections “by order” are made more and more systematically for re-examination requests. These are therefore not decided by collegial sections. Some nationalities see their subsequent applications directly decided « by order ».<sup>179</sup>

E. Guarantees for vulnerable groups of asylum seekers (children, traumatised persons, survivors of torture)

1. Special Procedural guarantees

Indicators:

- Is there a specific identification mechanism in place to systematically identify vulnerable asylum seekers?  Yes  No  Yes, but only for some categories
- Are there special procedural arrangements/guarantees for vulnerable people?  Yes  No  Yes, but only for some categories (Unaccompanied children)

In France there is no specific mechanism in place for identifying asylum seekers in need of specific procedural guarantees. French law does not foresee a special treatment for vulnerable groups of asylum seekers. Unaccompanied children as well as victims of torture for instance are not exempted from the processing of their claims under the accelerated or border procedures.

No additional time is allocated for vulnerable asylum seekers. The only specific guarantee lies in the possibility of requesting a closed-door audience with the National Court of Asylum (CNDA), if the Head of Section agrees. The Head of Section may also do this automatically if they feel that it is preferable with regard to the circumstances of the person.

Unaccompanied asylum-seeking children are interviewed at OFPRA (Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless Persons) under the same conditions as adults. Their status as children is not specifically taken into account. The only difference is the presence of an authorised, trusted, third party (the legal representative or Administrateur ad hoc). The children often report having been intimidated by the atmosphere of OFPRA. Although children are supported, they are not necessarily fully informed of the purpose of the interview. In fact, there are very few reception centres specialised in the care of unaccompanied asylum-seeking children. Many of them are looked after by traditional child protection facilities, whose staff is rarely trained in asylum requests issues.

The absence of an identification mechanism and of special procedural guarantees may have serious consequences. For instance it means that no special precautions are taken in the formulation of a negative answer. A social worker from Forum réfugiés-Cosi has for instance seen negative decisions that were argued by the fact that the claimant had shown no emotion when recalling the rape she had been subjected to or that the claimant seemed distant from the recollection of the abuses she was describing. Asylum seekers can be extremely hurt when they see such comments in the summary of their interviews.

However, a specific treatment for vulnerable groups of asylum seekers is gradually being considered by OFPRA. The action plan for the reform of OFPRA (adopted on 22 May 2013) had set the path for the creation of five thematic groups in order to reinforce the OFPRA's ability to deal with protection needs related to torture, trafficking in human beings, unaccompanied minors, sexual orientation and gender-based violence. These groups have been tasked to work on awareness raising, training and designing specific support tools to examine these claims (in particular during the interviews).<sup>180</sup> The practical impact of these measures remains to be seen.

In addition, OFPRA staff is being trained on issues related to dealing with testimonies recounting painful events during the interview process. Starting in October 2013, Forum réfugiés-Cosi and the Belgium NGO Ulysse have conducted several 2-days trainings for OFPRA case workers with two main objectives: taking into account the difficulties asylum seekers may face when they have to share their story after traumatic events and equipping case officers with tools to help them in these situations. OFPRA has announced its goal to train all 170 case workers by the end of 2015.<sup>181</sup>

2. Use of medical reports

Indicators:

- Does the legislation provide for the possibility of a medical report in support of the applicant's statements regarding past persecution or serious harm?
 Yes       Yes, but not in all cases       No
- Are medical reports taken into account when assessing the credibility of the applicant's statements?       Yes       No      More or less

The legal framework does not foresee the use of medical reports when examining asylum requests. However, applicants often present medical certificates from specialised centres.. Some doctors say that all too often, their certificates are not taken into account (apparently OFPRA often dismisses them as evidence, without seeking a second opinion).The medical report is paid for by the asylum seekers via the state supported medical insurance (CMU or AME).

The consideration of the medical certificates at the CNDA can vary a lot. The poorly argued dismissal of a medical certificate by the CNDA has been criticised by the European Court of Human Rights in September 2013. The applicant, of Tamil ethnic origin, had provided a medical certificate from the doctor of the waiting area in the Paris Charles de Gaulle airport describing several burn injuries. The Court found that the CNDA had failed to effectively rebut the strong presumption raised by the medical certificate of treatment contrary to Article 3 of the European convention on Human Rights and therefore that the forced return of the applicant to Sri Lanka would place him at risk of torture or inhuman or degrading treatments ..<sup>182</sup>

A medical certificate to confirm the absence of a female circumcision is requested during the examination of an asylum request presented by a young woman or girl that is based on the risk of female genital mutilation (FGM) in her country of origin. During the OFPRA interview, she will be asked to demonstrate that she has not been subject to FGM, if this is the reason she fears persecution if she returns to her country of origin. Once protection has been granted, the requirement of a medical certificate remains. OFPRA requests that a medical certificate is sent to them each year, proving the person has still not undergone FGM, as a required document for the renewal of protection and the right to remain.<sup>183</sup>

3. Age assessment and legal representation of unaccompanied children

Indicators:

- Does the law provide for an identification mechanism for unaccompanied children?
 Yes       No
- Does the law provide for the appointment of a representative to all unaccompanied children?
 Yes       No

The term unaccompanied child has no explicit definition in French law. The protection of these young people is therefore based on the notion of children under threat, as outlined in French legal provisions on child protection, which is applicable regardless of nationalities. Départements have the responsibility of unaccompanied children in France, and so it is difficult to obtain an overview of the situation for unaccompanied children at the national level. In France there is no specific procedure in place for identifying unaccompanied children. Protection measures taken are initiated by children who turn to NGOs or judges for help. When they arrive at the Prefecture headquarters, the authorities verify only whether a legal guardian is present or not. If this is not the case, a legal representative to support and represent the child in asylum procedures (ad hoc administrator) should be appointed. There were some local initiatives to set up assessment centres for unaccompanied children in 2012 but for now there is no coherent national mechanism. For example, an Advice and Reception platform for unaccompanied children in Paris (Permanence d'accueil et d'orientation des mineurs isolés étrangers – PAOMIE) is a unique point of entry for their care provisions<sup>184</sup>. This new arrangement aims to reorganise admission to child support provisions by way of a pre-reception centre for unaccompanied children in Paris. It carries out an initial evaluation of the situation for unaccompanied children in Paris and provides appropriate introductory information. As another example, since 2005, Forum réfugiés-Cosi carries out missions of information, legal support and accompaniment of hundreds of asylum seeking unaccompanied minors arriving in the Rhône– in complement to the activities of the French authorities.

The French authorities have attempted to harmonise the modalities for the reception and assistance provided to unaccompanied children (including asylum-seeking children) with a circular dated 31 May 2013.<sup>185</sup> The circular aimed at limiting the disparities between the départements in terms of arrivals of unaccompanied children and at harmonising the practices throughout the country.

It describes a procedure that should be followed everywhere, based on a homogeneous evaluation protocol and some funding from the national authorities. Therefore from June 2013, funding from the State covers reception costs of the children during the first 5 days while the evaluation and the orientation is carried out. If minority is admitted, the State prosecutor then either allocates a reception place in the département or resorts to a national cell based in Paris which will indicate in which other département the child could be placed. However, in practice, some départements refuse to accept these children and the State prosecutors hardly resort to binding measures even though the circular enables them to do so.<sup>186</sup>

As unaccompanied children do not have legal capacity, they must imperatively be represented in any act concerning them (for all procedures, including Dublin). When they are deprived of legal representation (i.e. if no guardian has been appointed by the guardianship judge before placement in care), the Public Prosecutor, notified by the prefecture, should designate an ad hoc administrator (legal representative) who will represent them throughout the asylum procedure. The law of 4 March 2002 on parental authority provides for the nomination of those legal representatives (administrateur ad hoc). Such a legal representative is appointed to represent the child only in administrative and judicial procedures related to the asylum claim. This person is not tasked to ensure the child's welfare the way a guardian would. Every four years, within the jurisdiction of each Appeal Court, a list of ad hoc administrators is drawn up, designated to represent children held in waiting areas or who have requested refugee status. "To be included on the list, any individual person must meet the following criteria: 1. Be aged between 30 and 70; 2. Demonstrate an interest on youth related issues for an adequate time and relevant skills; 3. reside within the jurisdiction of the Appeal Court 4. Never have been subject to criminal convictions, or to administrative or disciplinary sanctions contrary to honour, probity, or good morals; 5. Have not experienced personal bankruptcy or been subject to other sanctions in application of book VI of the commercial code with regard to commercial difficulties".<sup>187</sup> These ad hoc administrators receive a flat allowance to cover their expenditures. No specific training or - at minimum- awareness of asylum procedures is required for their selection.

The ad hoc administrator is the only person authorised to sign the asylum request form and transmit it to OFPRA. In practice, the appointment of an ad hoc administrator can take between 1 to 3 months. However, there are jurisdictions where the absence of ad hoc administrators or their insufficient number do not allow the Prosecutor to appoint any, These children are therefore forced to wait until they turn 18 to be able to lodge their asylum application at OFPRA.<sup>188</sup>

In the case of asylum requests at the border, Article L221-5 of CESEDA states that an ad hoc administrator should be appointed "without delay" for any child held in a waiting area (transit zone). "When an unaccompanied minor is not authorised to enter the country, the State Prosecutor is immediately advised of this by the administrative authority, and appoints an ad hoc administrator without delay. This person assists the minor during their stay in the waiting area and ensures they are represented in the legal and administrative procedures related to their stay." According to the 2014 HRW report on unaccompanied children detained at the French border<sup>189</sup> (covering all unaccompanied minors, not only asylum seekers), the system "still lacks sufficient government funding to meet the requirements of guardianship laid out by the Committee on the Rights of the Child. When large numbers of children arrive, or when children arrive on weekends or holidays, there can be delays in assigning guardians". In practice, delays in the appointment of the legal representative can lead to unaccompanied children not meeting with such a person and going through the procedure by themselves.<sup>190</sup> It is important to note that – in border waiting areas - unaccompanied children are not yet assisted by a legal representative (Administrateur ad hoc) at the time of the notification of the possibility offered to them to benefit from a "clear day" (24 hours during which they cannot be returned). There is a risk that unaccompanied children do not understand the interest of this possibility and therefore that they end up deprived from this right.

In addition, due to lack of places in the children's space at Roissy airport 's waiting area (which consists of three bedroom, each with two beds), some unaccompanied minors are sometimes held with unrelated adults. According to HRW findings, "when there are more than six unaccompanied children, or an incompatible number of boys and girls, the oldest – for example those over 13 – are sent in the adult section. [...] In October 2013, 10 children were in the adult zone, in addition to the six in the children's zone"<sup>191</sup>.

The use of procedures to determine the age varies between Départements. Some Départements place the emphasis on civil status documentation, others conduct first a social evaluation and some also proceed to a bone examination. Procedures for bone examination are highly controversial, even more so when existing civil status documentation is disregarded without a thorough examination of the documents. According to UNHCR,<sup>192</sup> these young people should get the benefit of the doubt in the event that an evaluation cannot establish their exact age. Once again, practice is not uniform across the country. Young people are rarely given the benefit of the doubt in practice, and this happens less and less frequently. The State Prosecutor is the authority that decides on an age assessment procedure. In fact, the Prosecutor is responsible for issuing the order to place the child in care (temporarily or not) and may therefore request additional tests if there is a doubt about their age. In some (rare) cases, the prosecutor can ask the Border Police to conduct an interview with a view to make them admit that they are over 18. If they admit they are over 18, these young people risk being sent immediately to appear before the authorities for fraud, and if relevant, use of false documents. The Public Prosecution department can request three months of imprisonment and issue a detention warrant, as well as an interdiction from French territory that can last from one up to three years.

The 31 May circular also aimed at imposing a common evaluation procedure for determining the age.<sup>193</sup> The evaluation should be supported by a body of concordant evidence which include interviews, following a common template, verification of the authenticity of civil status documents, and "if doubts prevail after these steps and only in this case", a medical check. The harmonisation impact of the circular is still to be determined. Reminding that no method taken alone can scientifically determine precisely and reliably the age of a person, the High Council for Public Health has adopted a recommendation on 23 January 2014 stating that "the medical examination must take place only at last resort and after a social evaluation and an examination of civil status documents."<sup>194</sup>

In any case, having been determined to be above 18 as a result of an age assessment procedure has a dramatic impact on the young asylum seeker's ability to benefit from fundamental rights. The age assessment procedure does not entail the granting of new documentation. This means that the person might be considered alternatively as an adult or a child by various institutions. The Préfecture for instance may refuse to grant a residence permit with a view to lodge the asylum application, arguing that the young asylum seeker needs to have a legal representative (the prefecture refers to the declaration of the person in the asylum procedure). However, such legal representative will most likely not be appointed, as the Prosecutor relies on the result of the age assessment procedure.<sup>195</sup>

Jurisprudence of the Council of State of March 2014 is of great interest in this context. In that case, the appeal of an unaccompanied child before the administrative court (to obtain the implementation of his reception rights) had been considered inadmissible as the child was not represented by a legal representative or a guardian. The Council of State cancelled this decision and recognized the right of a minor to engage directly in a procedure when their "fundamental freedoms" are at stake.<sup>196</sup>

F. The safe country concepts

Indicators:

- Does national legislation allow for the use of safe country of origin concept in the asylum procedure?  Yes  No
- Does national legislation allow for the use of safe third country concept in the asylum procedure?  Yes  No
- Does national legislation allow for the use of first country of asylum concept in the asylum procedure?  Yes  No
- Is there a list of safe countries of origin?  Yes  No
- Is the safe country of origin concept used in practice?  Yes  No
- Is the safe third country concept used in practice?  Yes  No

The notion of safe countries of origin was introduced into French Legislation by the Law of 10 December 2003.<sup>197</sup> By law, a country is considered safe "if it ensures respect for the principles of liberty, democracy and the rule of law, as well as human rights and fundamental liberties".<sup>198</sup> The first list of safe countries of origin was established in June 2005 by the OFPRA (Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless Persons) Management Board. Every time a country is removed from or added to the list, the deliberations of the management board are published in the Official Journal. This list can be reviewed in OFPRA Board meetings (no system of regular re-examination). The list of countries considered to be safe countries of origin is public. At the end of April 2014, it included the following 17 countries: Albania, Armenia, Benin, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Cape Verde, Georgia, Ghana, India, Kosovo, Former Republic of Macedonia (FYROM), Mauritius, Moldova, Mongolia, Montenegro, Senegal, Serbia and Tanzania..<sup>199</sup>

The consequences of this provision affect the procedure in a fundamental way. Asylum seekers from countries included in this list cannot obtain a temporary residence permit on asylum grounds. Their request is therefore processed by OFPRA within an accelerated procedure and their potential appeal

<sup>199</sup> It is to be noted that Bangladesh was withdrawn from the list on 4 March 2013 in a Council of State decision on recourse against the decision of 6 December 2011 to include Armenia, Bangladesh, Moldova and Montenegro on the list of safe countries of origin. Croatia was withdrawn from the list by the management board of OFPRA following its accession to the EU on 1st July 2013. See an updated list here.

before the National Court of Asylum (CNDA) does not have suspensive effect. Placed in an accelerated procedure, these asylum seekers are usually not accommodated in reception centres and are subject to more precarious reception conditions than asylum seekers in a regular procedure, as they are excluded from the regular reception scheme.

The safe country of origin concept is frequently used in practice. 91.5% of the asylum seekers coming from countries deemed as safe countries of origin have been assigned to an accelerated procedure. The average recognition rate for these asylum seekers stood at only 6.2% in 2013.<sup>200</sup>

The sources used by the management board of OFPRA to substantiate its decisions are not officially shared. OFPRA has an internal resources service working on country of origin information and a UNHCR representative sits in the management board meetings, but the process lacks transparency as to the sources of information used to decide on the safeness of a country.

An information report of Senators Leconte and Frassa from November 2012 highlighted that "the inclusion of a country on the list of safe countries of origin is rather motivated by the desire to reduce the influx of asylum requests, than by the objectively safe nature of the political and social situation of any given country."<sup>201</sup> In 2013, the share of asylum claims coming from countries deemed as safe countries of origin represented 7% of all asylum claims (14% in 2011).<sup>202</sup>

Decisions to add a country to the list can be challenged before the Council of State by third parties. Several countries have been removed (but can sometimes also be reintroduced at a later stage from the list since 2005:

- The Council of State has annulled the inclusion of Albania and Niger on the list of safe countries of origin in February 2008; Armenia, Madagascar, Turkey and Mali (for women only) in July 2010; Albania and Kosovo in March 2012; and Bangladesh in March 2013
- The Management Board of OFPRA has decided to withdraw Georgia in November 2009; Mali (men and women) in December 2012; Croatia in June 2013 and Ukraine in March 2014.

The same management board has decided on 16 December 2013 to modify again the list of safe countries of origin and has added Albania, Georgia and Kosovo to the list.<sup>203</sup> The Ministry of Interior has sent an instruction to the Prefects on 2 January 2014 calling them not to deliver temporary residence permit to those nationals whose request for a residence permit to lodge an asylum claim has been made after 29 December 2013<sup>204</sup> and to those whose request for a residence permit was made before but has not yet been decided on.<sup>205</sup>

Considering that the conditions of respect for the principles of freedom, democracy and the rule of law, as well as human rights and fundamental freedoms are not met in these three countries, several French NGOs have decided to challenge this decision before the Council of State.<sup>206</sup>

Finally, the Management Board of OFPRA has decided on 26 March 2014 to remove Ukraine from the list of safe countries of origin. On 5 March 2014, UNHCR had called states to remove Ukraine from their safe countries of origin (SCO) list. Shortly after and prior to the official withdrawal of Ukraine from the

G. Treatment of specific nationalities

Asylum seekers that are nationals of countries considered to be of safe origin are most of the time dealt with under an accelerated procedure (in 91.5% of the cases) (see Safe country concepts section). Besides, according to OFPRA, following the withdrawal of Bangladesh from the list of safe country of origin, these asylum claims are treated under the “last arrived, first examined” principle which meant that the average period for their examination was of 91 days after May 2013.

According to the practical observations of many actors in the field of asylum in France, the processing of asylum claims for people of Rwandan nationality can take a particularly long time.

Syrian asylum seekers do not get a specific treatment in France, the only remarkable difference lies in the very high recognition rate they benefit from at the moment. Protection was granted by OFPRA to asylum seekers from Syria in 835 instances in 2013, which amounts to a recognition rate of 94.8%). This rate is to be compared with an average recognition rate of 12.8% for all decisions of OFPRA. Syrian citizens have by far the highest recognition rate among all nationalities (Iraqis with a 67.4% rate rank second).<sup>208</sup> Based on OFPRA’s annual report for 2013<sup>209</sup>, 56.8% of Syrian nationals granted protection are granted refugee status (based on the Geneva Convention) while 43.2% of them obtained subsidiary protection. In compliance with OFPRA’s aim to have an accelerated examination for these cases, the average period for the examination of claims from Syrian nationals was of 138 days at the end of 2013 (against an average of 204 days for all nationalities).

It should be noted that France has not seen a very high level of arrivals of Syrian asylum seekers in 2013 in comparison to other European countries. From 1 January to 31st July 2013, Syrian nationals submitted 688 asylum applications, among which 485 applications were submitted by adults and 203 by dependent children. In proportion this is however a striking increase as only 637 and 119 asylum claims had been lodged by Syrian nationals in 2012 and 2011 respectively. In any case, the French first instance authority does not seem to resort to any policy of “freezing applications” or postponing the taking of decisions. Of the 458 requests<sup>210</sup> made to OFPRA in 2012 by Syrian nationals, 264 were examined by OFPRA.

Moreover, the French authorities have not designed a status specifically for applicants from Syria whose asylum application has been rejected. There is no official position with regards to returns to Syria (no moratorium) but there has been no reports of returns of Syrian nationals to Syria from France in 2012 and early 2013.<sup>211</sup> These rejected asylum seekers do not have an official status in France but they can go to the administrative courts (tribunal administratif and then Cour d’appel) to argue for a potential violation of Art. 3 ECHR, in case of removal to Syria. According to the ECRE/ELENA Information Note on Syrians seeking protection in Europe

<sup>211</sup> However, there have been returns to Italy for instance under readmission procedures or Dublin II procedures.

“there is divergent French jurisprudence in relation to returns to Syria. For example, in accordance with Article L. 513-2 of the Code for Entry and Residence of Foreigners in France and the Right of Asylum (CESEDA), the Paris Court of Appeal confirmed the impossibility of removing a Syrian citizen to Syria, due to the potential violation of Art. 3 ECHR.<sup>212</sup> The same Court specified that a person cannot be returned to Syria, as it is “a country ravaged by civil war”.<sup>213</sup> The Versailles Court of Appeal refused to return Syrian nationals to their country of origin on the basis of Article 3(1) of Convention on the Rights of the Child,<sup>214</sup> which requires the “best interests of the child” to be a ‘primary consideration’. The decision to return the Syrian father to Syria while the mother and the child stayed in France was said to potentially deprive the child of the presence of both parents. The Bordeaux Court of Appeal also refused to return nationals to Syria on the basis of article L. 511-1 of the CESEDA. This article provides that foreigners who may not be treated medically in their country of origin have to stay in France.<sup>215</sup> At the same time, the Bordeaux and Lyon Courts of Appeal considered that Syrian citizens who are unable to establish the reality of risks in Syria should return to Syria.<sup>216</sup>”

Syrian nationals who have been granted a refugee status benefit from the same rights as any other recognised refugee in France: a residence permit valid for 10 years (renewable), right to family reunification if family members were in the country of origin at the moment of the granting of the protection, access to the labour market after having been granted status (as soon as the person receives the récépissé). Similarly, Syrian nationals who have been granted a subsidiary protection status benefit from the same rights as any other subsidiary protection beneficiaries in France: a residence permit valid for 1 year (renewable) and access to the labour market right after the granting of their status (as soon as the person receives the récépissé).

As a side note, it is interesting to note that a special resettlement effort has been announced on 16 October 2013 by President François Hollande after a meeting with the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, when he declared that France will resettle 500 Syrian refugees.<sup>217</sup> Specific information has not been shared until now as to which profiles or which regions would benefit from this operation (coming in addition to the French resettlement quota established at 100 cases examined per year). It is not clear yet if they will benefit from a true resettlement programme or a humanitarian status.

Reception Conditions

A. Access and forms of reception conditions

1. Criteria and restrictions to access reception conditions

Indicators:

- Are asylum seekers entitled to material reception conditions according to national legislation :
  - o During the accelerated procedure?
 Yes       Yes, but limited to reduced material conditions       No
  - o During border procedures:

  - o In case of a subsequent application:
 Yes       Yes, but limited to reduced material conditions       No
- Is there a requirement in the law that only asylum seekers who lack resources are entitled to material reception conditions?       Yes       No

Asylum seekers going through a regular procedure are entitled to housing and an allowance. They can receive the temporary waiting allowance (ATA) if they are not accommodated in a reception centre, or the monthly subsistence allowance (AMS) if they are being housed in reception or transit centres. They are entitled to healthcare through a system of universal healthcare (couverture maladie universelle-CMU). The payment of the temporary financial allowance stops one month after a negative decision by the CNDA is received.

Asylum seekers placed under an accelerated procedure are eligible for emergency reception scheme. They do not have a residence permit and therefore have no access to the universal healthcare scheme (CMU) but they are entitled to state medical assistance (AME – with a three month waiting period). Those who are placed in an accelerated procedure because they are from a safe country of origin can receive the temporary waiting allowance (ATA). The allocation of the ATA allowance stops as soon as they receive a rejection by OFPRA (French Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless persons) on first instance.

Asylum seekers who fall under the Dublin procedure in France can in theory benefit from emergency accommodation up until the notification of the decision of readmission (in practice, many live in the street), while Dublin returnees are treated as regular asylum seekers and therefore benefit from the same reception conditions granted to asylum seekers in the regular or the accelerated procedure. In April 2013, the French government took steps to comply with the Reception Directive and with the Court of Justice of the European Union decision<sup>218</sup> as the Ministry of Interior has given instructions on 23 April 2013 to provide allowance to asylum seekers under the Dublin procedure who request it at Pole emploi, the unemployment agency (when the requirements are met).<sup>219</sup> Asylum seekers under the Dublin procedure who had requested the allowance after 27 September 2012 and who had received a negative response can in theory request a retroactive payment. This instruction has been confirmed by a Council of State decision of 30 December 2013<sup>220</sup> which states in paragraph 13 that by excluding from the granting of the minimal reception conditions the asylum seekers who had not complied with the obligation to move to the Member State found to be responsible under the Dublin regulation, the circular of 1 April 2011 contradicts the 2003 Reception Conditions Directive. The Council of State reiterated that the reception conditions (i.e. ATA allowance) have to be granted until the effective transfer to another Member State. Point 3.2.1 of Annex I of the 2011 circular<sup>221</sup> has therefore been cancelled. Besides, a Council of State decision of 12 February 2014<sup>222</sup> has recalled that, short of the transposition of article 16 of the Reception Conditions Directive (allowing the withdrawal of reception conditions in case of flight of the asylum seeker) into French law, the instruction to Prefects of 23 April 2013 to transmit to Pole emploi (French employment agency) the list of asylum seekers considered to be absconding “does not have the aim and cannot have the effect of resulting in the suspension of the granting of the temporary waiting allowance”.

In addition to several administrative difficulties linked to the time taken to process the requests (mostly for the healthcare scheme, see section C on healthcare), the biggest impediment to access material reception conditions is the structural lack of places in regular reception centres. Indeed, at the end of 2013, there were 23 369 places in regular reception centres (CADA) while France had registered 66 251 asylum requests (adults and children<sup>223</sup>).<sup>224</sup> According to the Ministry of Interior, only 32% of the asylum seekers entitled to an accommodation in a regular reception centre had been able to access such a centre on 30 June 2013 (19 008 asylum seekers housed in a CADA centre out of 59 327 asylum seekers entitled to the reception scheme).<sup>225</sup>

The number of reception centres is therefore clearly not sufficient for the French scheme to provide access to housing to all the asylum seekers who should benefit from it in accordance with the Reception Conditions Directive. On 31 December 2013, there were 15'000 asylum seekers on a priority waiting list to obtain a place in a CADA reception centre, amounting to an average waiting period of 12 months.<sup>226</sup>

Despite significant efforts by public authorities who had decided in 2012 the creation of 4,000 additional CADA places by December 2014, the facilities of the National Asylum Scheme (DNA) remain inadequate, in comparison to the requests registered by OFPRA.<sup>227</sup>

Upon entrance into the reception centres for asylum seekers, asylum seekers are asked to declare that they have no resources but this lack of resources is not verified in practice. With regards to the ATA, the asylum seeker has to declare their level of resources and justify that he or she has a monthly income lower than 499.31 Euros for a single person, or 748.97 Euros for a couple without children.<sup>228</sup> There is no specific assessment of the risk of destitution when deciding that these income thresholds are sufficient and therefore do not grant the right to the ATA allowance.

<sup>227</sup> The information report prepared by the Committee for Evaluation and Oversight of Public Policy on Emergency Accommodation in January 2012 advises an increase in the number of CADA places in particular. Likewise, the report by the Parliamentary deputy Béatrice Pavy, on behalf of the Committee on Finance, Economics and Budgetary Oversight on the 2011 budget (no. 3775) states that “development in this area is not sufficient to meet the needs created by strong growth in the number of asylum requests, combined with a reduced turnover of the people accommodated in the CADA centres”.

In all cases, material reception conditions are tied to the issuance of the letter of registration prepared by OFPRA and sent once the asylum application has been received and registered. Article L. 348-1 of the Code of social action and family<sup>229</sup> also foresees that access to asylum seekers reception centres is subjected to the presentation of the temporary residence permit (APS) or the 6 months “récépissé” stating the date on which the asylum application has been lodged.<sup>230</sup>

2. Forms and levels of material reception conditions

Indicators:

- Amount of the financial allowance/vouchers granted to asylum seekers on 31/12/2013 (per month, in original currency and in euros): 340.50 euros (ATA)

Different forms of material reception conditions exist in the legislation. They include: accommodation in reception centres, accommodation in emergency schemes, and financial benefits.

Reception centres for asylum seekers:

Only those who have an authorisation to remain and who have a pending asylum claim are eligible to stay in reception centres.<sup>231</sup> Asylum seekers under a Dublin procedure are for now excluded from the possibility to access these centres. The place in centres for asylum seekers is offered by the prefecture where the application has been made. The average length of stay in CADA reception centres in 2013 was of 562 days – that is to say one year and six months.<sup>232</sup> If the asylum seeker does not accept this offer, they will be excluded as a consequence from the benefit of the temporary waiting allowance (ATA). If there is no place in a reception centre, the asylum seeker is placed on a waiting list, in the meantime, they will be directed to other provisional accommodation solutions.<sup>233</sup> However, if the asylum seekers did not succeed in getting access to a reception centre before lodging his appeal, their chances to benefit from one at the appeal stage are very slim.<sup>234</sup> In case of shortage of places, it can happen that these asylum seekers have no other solutions than relying on night shelters or living in the street.

There are in France also two ‘transit’ centres which are tasked to receive temporarily asylum seekers and to organise their orientation towards the national reception scheme (220 places in Villeurbanne and 80 in Créteil). Under special circumstances, some asylum seekers under Dublin or accelerated procedures can also be accommodated for a while there.

<sup>228</sup> Those amounts are those used to calculate a social welfare allowance granted to people with low wages, the Active Solidarity Income (RSA- Revenu de Solidarité Active ).,

<sup>229</sup> Article L.348-1 of the CASF states that “Third country nationals who possess one of the residence documents mentioned in article L.742-1 of the Ceseda can, upon their request, benefit from the social assistance to be housed in reception centres for asylum seekers”.

Emergency reception scheme:

Because of shortages of places in regular reception centres, the state has developed emergency schemes in every department (20 637 places have been funded in 2012 and almost 22 000 places were financed in 2013<sup>235</sup>). They can either be hotel rooms (56 %), flats (23%) or collective emergency facilities (20%)<sup>236</sup>. These facilities can house asylum seekers prior to their entry into a reception centre as well as asylum seekers who are not eligible to accommodation in a reception centre (for instance Asylum seekers subject to the Dublin procedure).<sup>237</sup>

Temporary waiting allowance (ATA):

This allowance<sup>238</sup> is provided to asylum seekers older than 18 years old for the whole duration of the examination of their application. It is granted to asylum seekers who cannot be accommodated in reception centres even though they have accepted the offer from the prefecture – because of shortage of places available. The ATA allowance is renewed every month until a final decision on the claim is taken, provided that the conditions of resources are still fulfilled. Since two Council of State decisions in 2008 and 2011, asylum seekers under an accelerated procedure should also benefit from the ATA allowance (but only during the first instance stage). Pôle emploi (the French employment agency) has the overall responsibility for the distribution of the allowance (including decisions regarding its application or rejection). The amount of the ATA is defined in law and has been set at 11.35 Euros a day/per adult,<sup>239</sup> or 340.50 Euros in a month of 30 days as of 1st January 2014.

According to the National Consultative Commission on Human Rights,<sup>240</sup> “the amount of the ATA allowance is insufficient, as the French Council of State has underlined several times<sup>241</sup> and is not enough to survive when housing is not provided”. The inadequacy of the level of ATA allowance had also been underlined by the Commissioner for Human Rights of the Council of Europe, Thomas Hammarberg in his letter to Eric Besson, then French Minister for immigration, integration, national identity and solidarity development on 3rd August 2010<sup>242</sup> (the allowance has only been increased by 68 cents per day since 2010<sup>243</sup>). In France, an individual can be considered to be under the poverty threshold if their monthly income is less than 814 or 977 Euros depending on the definition of poverty used.<sup>244</sup>

In addition, the fact that the allowance is provided only to adults, causes inequalities between households of asylum seekers as the same amount will be granted to a single man and to a single parent with three under-aged children.<sup>245</sup>

<sup>245</sup> A reform of this method of calculation has been discussed in the framework of the consultations for the reform of the French asylum procedure – see the Report on the reform of the asylum procedure, Valérie Létard and Jean-Louis Touraine, 28 November 2013.

Monthly subsistence allowance (AMS):

This allowance is allocated by the reception centres to each person (not only each adult) and replaces the ATA allowance once the asylum seeker enters the centre, if they do not have a sufficient level of resources.<sup>246</sup> The amount of AMS can vary between a total of 91 and 718 € a month, depending on the “services” provided by the reception centre and the family situation of the asylum seeker.<sup>247</sup> These allowances are set by law and are published in the official journal.<sup>248</sup> Asylum seekers who earn some income during the process of their application for asylum (benefiting from a right to work thanks to another residence permit for instance), may be asked to contribute for their stay in CADA centres (if their income exceeds 499.31 Euros for a single person, or 748.97 Euros for a couple without children<sup>249</sup>). The amount of this contribution is set by the Prefect on the basis of a scale which takes into account the resources of the asylum seekers and the expenses they have to bear during the reception phase. This contribution has to be paid directly to the reception facility.<sup>250</sup>

Refugees and beneficiaries of subsidiary protection can, upon request, stay in asylum seekers reception centres until an accommodation offer is available, within a strict timeframe of three months (renewable once in special cases) from the final decision. Upon request, those whose claims have been rejected are able to stay in a centre for up to one month from the notification of the decision to reject their claim. Afterwards, they might access emergency accommodation through emergency aid (if a place is available).

Since the implementation of the circular of 24th May 2011, asylum seekers in an accelerated procedure are only able to benefit from a place in the emergency reception scheme until the decision, either positive or negative, of OFPRA (French Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless People) is taken.<sup>251</sup> Under specific exemption, they can stay for a maximum of one month after the definitive decisions by the OFPRA, even if an appeal is under way. Asylum seekers who fall under the Dublin regulation are only able to benefit from emergency housing until the notification of the decision of transfer. Under specific exemption they can stay in this housing for up to a month after the decision to be re-admitted.

In practice, reception centres in France have a varied application of these deadlines. In case of asylum seekers over-staying in these reception centres, the managers expose themselves to budget reductions or withdrawal of accreditations (even if these occur rarely in practice).<sup>252</sup> When these deadlines are complied with, these asylum seekers have to rely on “regular” emergency shelters (night shelters for homeless persons) or live in the streets.

Finally, French legislation excludes asylum seekers from the granting of all family related welfare benefits as the residence permits provided to asylum seekers are not listed in the permits that give eligibility to these benefits.<sup>253</sup> Asylum seekers are also not eligible to receive the social welfare allowance, the so-called Active Solidarity Income (RSA- Revenu de Solidarité Active), an allowance granted to individuals above 25 years old who do not have resources or have very low incomes.

3. Types of accommodation

Indicators:

- Number of places in all the reception centres (both permanent and for first arrivals): 23.369 on 31 December 2013
- Type of accommodation most frequently used in a regular procedure :
  - Reception centre     Hotel/hostel     Emergency shelter     private housing
- Type of accommodation most frequently used in an accelerated procedure :

- Number of places in private accommodation: not available
- Number of reception centres: 271
- Are there any problems of overcrowding in the reception centres?     Yes     No
- Are there instances of asylum seekers not having access to reception accommodation because of a shortage of places?     Yes     No
- What is, if available, the average length of stay of asylum seekers in the reception centres? 562 days in 2013
- Are unaccompanied children ever accommodated with adults in practice?     Yes     No

In France, the Office Français de l'Immigration et de l'Intégration (OFII) carries responsibility for the orientation platforms that provide initial guidance for applicants. Local authorities at the Département level (prefecture and decentralised administrations) are tasked to organise the accommodation in regular reception centres, as well as to manage the emergency accommodation scheme. The management of these asylum reception centres is then subcontracted to the semi-public company Adoma or to NGOs that have been selected through a public call for tenders. These centres fall under the French social initiatives (action sociale) and are funded by the State. Their financial management is entrusted to the Prefect of the Département.

The national reception scheme includes 270 regular reception centres for asylum seekers (CADA), 1 centre especially suited to unaccompanied children asylum seekers and 2 'transit' centres (in Villeurbanne and in Créteil). In addition, there are several thousands of emergency scheme places.<sup>254</sup> The distribution of the reception centres on the territory is sometimes at odd with the asylum seekers flows. For instance, only 16.5% of the CADA centre places are available in the Paris region where 36% of the asylum claims have been made in 2013<sup>255</sup>.

Insufficient capacity in regular reception centres

At the end of 2013, there were 23 369 places in regular reception centres (CADA) while France had registered 66 251 asylum requests (adults and children<sup>256,257</sup>). The number of reception centres is therefore clearly not sufficient for the French scheme to provide access to housing to all the asylum seekers who should benefit from it in accordance with the Reception Conditions directive. No phenomenon of overcrowding in each of the centres is observed but the overall reception capacities are stretched. On 31 December 2013, there were 15,000 asylum seekers on a priority waiting list to obtain a place in a CADA reception centre, amounting to an average waiting period of 12 months.<sup>258</sup> Until they obtain a place, they are housed in emergency facilities (centres or hotels) or are living in the streets.

Under the circular of 3 May 2007 on the missions assigned to CADA centres,<sup>259</sup> the persons who should benefit from a priority admission in these centres were: the newly arrived asylum seekers (at the first stages of the procedure); families with children, single women, persons joining asylum seekers already accommodated in a reception centre (spouse, dependent parents, grandparents and children), single young adults, young applicants who have been declared adults following an age assessment; asylum seekers with health problems who have a motivated medical notice and finally those who have been flagged by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. In France, families, single women or traumatised asylum seekers are not necessarily accommodated in separated facilities or separate wings (but this can happen in some centres).

Unaccompanied children are not accommodated in foster families. As a general rule, after identification, unaccompanied children (including those between 16 and 18) are placed in specific children shelters that fall under the responsibility of the departmental authorities.

Difficult access to emergency facilities

Given the lack of places in CADA centres, the State authorities have developed emergency schemes in all departments. At the end of June 2013, 21'898 asylum seekers were housed in emergency facilities.<sup>260</sup>

They can take the form of places in special hotels, of collective emergency centres or flats. This system is managed by the prefects.<sup>261</sup> Thus, in addition to the common use of hotels, in some areas there is a trend to open emergency centres dedicated to asylum seekers, open temporarily for the winter period or more permanently, but with less social workers available than in CADA centres. These centres have the merit, unlike the shielding of asylum seekers in hotels, to offer at least some sort of administrative and social support. In theory, only accommodation is provided in the context of these emergency reception centres. Food or clothing services may be provided by charities. However, in the Rhône department for instance, these emergency schemes are also saturated; in 2013 in Lyon, the average waiting period before an asylum seeker could have a place in a hotel was of 10-12 weeks (therefore relying on social emergency shelters or living in the street in the meantime). Thus, for example, at the end of November 2013, 290 vulnerable persons whose case should have been prioritised (families with minor children, pregnant women for instance) had no housing in the Rhône Département.

These emergency places do not benefit from a national monitoring mechanism. A pilot project to extend the national scheme monitoring tool to these emergency places has been launched in 2013 in Bretagne, Franche-Comté, Poitou-Charentes and Nord Regions.

In September 2013, the emergency scheme has attracted a lot of media attention through the situation in Clermont-Ferrand. The NGO handling the emergency housing for asylum seekers had to stop paying for the nights in hotels due to budget constraints and 200 to 300 asylum seekers, including many children, were forced to sleep on the streets for several nights. The NGO explained that the funding they received from the State authority could cover for 30 hotel rooms per night for a year when in reality they have to house 362 persons.<sup>262</sup>

As another example, on 18 November 2013, prior to the imminent evacuation of a camp under a bridge in Lyon, Forum réfugiés-Cosi organised, in consultation with the prefecture, the temporary housing of 315 asylum seekers in eight municipalities of the departments of Rhône, Ardèche and Isère, in partnership with Adoma which organised the housing of 105 people. These asylum seekers benefited from these emergency housing facilities until 31 March 2014.<sup>263</sup>

In any case, according to the ministry of interior data, 31% of the asylum seekers in 2013 (meaning 18 421 asylum seekers) had not benefited<sup>264</sup> from a housing funded by the State.

% of asylum seekers who did not obtain or did not request housing	31%

According to the National Consultative Commission on Human Rights, this situation is due to the marginalisation of normal reception centres in favour of the emergency scheme options: “in 2010, the funds assigned to emergency measures are well above those devoted to CADA reception centres. Such short-term management results in organising housing through more expensive schemes, that are in addition less suitable and do not include social and legal support”.<sup>267</sup> Also, in its opinion on the 15th December 2011,<sup>268</sup> the Commission estimated that “the rationalisation of the national reception scheme undertaken over the last few years has worked to weaken [the asylum seekers’] rights, without generating a significant reduction in associated costs.” UNHCR shared the concern of increasing precariousness, “UNHCR considered that such unequal treatment, which depended in particular on the place of asylum application, undoubtedly posed a problem. In that respect, UNHCR noted that since 2009 only one third of the asylum seekers had been placed in an asylum seeker reception centre (CADA).”<sup>269</sup>

In regions where arrivals are high, asylum seekers desperately wait for housing solutions in a scheme that is in theory designed for them and in the framework of which they have signed a document accepting any offer. Forum réfugiés-Cosi has stressed for many years that the rule for asylum seekers’ housing should be the regular reception centres (CADAs) and that emergency housing solutions should remain an exception that steps in temporarily to mitigate the current crisis.

Recognising that asylum seekers housed in regular reception centres benefit from a better support and - in equal situations - have more chances to obtain protection, the General Controllers report argued in 2013 that housing in dedicated reception centres must become again the norm and cover 2/3 of the asylum seekers, meaning a total of 35,000 places.<sup>270</sup>

Nuclear families can usually stay together during the asylum application process, but in practice it happens that families who have to rely on emergency shelters cannot stay together as rooms for men and women are sometimes separated in these shelters. Awareness-raising sessions are sometimes organised in the reception centres and the “planned parenthood” (Planning Familial) teams sometimes conduct trainings on the issue of gender based violence. In some reception centres, there are information leaflets and posters on excision and forced marriages. Finally, in the context of the procedure for asylum requests at the border, asylum seekers are held in the “waiting areas” while awaiting a decision on their application for an authorisation to enter the territory on the ground of an asylum application.<sup>271</sup> This zone may include accommodations "providing hotel type services" as this is currently the case for the area of the Paris Roissy CDG airport (in the ZAPI 3 - zone d'attente pour personnes en instance), which can receive up to 160 people. In other waiting areas, the material accommodation conditions vary: third country nationals are sometimes held in a nearby hotel (like in Orly airport at night) or in rooms within police stations. Not all are equipped with hotel type services.<sup>272</sup>

4. Conditions in reception facilities

Reception centres are the main form of accommodation provided to asylum seekers. There are 270 of them spread on the French territory, therefore the following description is a general assessment that cannot cover the specific situation to be found in all centres.

Living conditions in regular reception centres for asylum seekers are deemed adequate, and there are no official report of overcrowding in reception centres. The available surface per applicant can vary but has to respect a minimum of 7square meters per bedroom. A bedroom is usually shared by a couple. More than two children can be accommodated in the same room. Centres are usually clean and have sufficient sanitary facilities. Asylum seekers in these centres are usually able to cook for themselves thanks to shared kitchens. The 2011 Circular relating to the missions of reception centres for asylum seekers also foresees that sharing of flats has to be considered so as to preserve a sufficient individual space of living.<sup>273</sup>

None of these centres are closed centres. Asylum seekers can go outside whenever they want. The 2011 Circular encourages staff working in CADA centres to organise cultural activities to mitigate the inactivity of the persons accommodated there. Leisure activities such as sport activities or excursions are sometimes organized.

<sup>273</sup> See section I.1.2 of the Circular NOR IOCL1114301C of 19 August 2011 on the missions of reception centres for asylum seekers.

As per the 19 August 2011 circular, the staff working in reception centres has also the obligation to organize a medical check-up upon arrival in the reception centre (at the latest 8 days after arrival in order to avoid possibilities of contaminations related to tuberculosis).

The staff ratio is framed by the 2011 Circular; a minimum of 1 fulltime staff for 10 to 15 persons is required. Staff working in reception centres is trained.

France does not generally face protests or widespread hunger strikes. However, in September 2013 , asylum seekers protested in Besançon (East of France) against the lack of housing solutions for more than 100 asylum seekers, including pregnant women and more than 15 young children who were at the time sleeping in tents on a car park.<sup>274</sup>

5. Reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions

Indicators:

- Does the legislation provide for the possibility to reduce material reception conditions?
 Yes       No
- Does the legislation provide for the possibility to withdraw material reception conditions?
 Yes       No

Reception centres

Article 11 of the Rules of operation<sup>275</sup> which should be common to all CADA centres establishes that the exclusion from the centre may be imposed by the management in case of false statements concerning the identity or personal situations of the asylum seekers accommodated. Asylum seekers can also be excluded from the centres if they do not respect the rules of community life (seriously violent behaviour for instance). Such decisions of exclusion are pronounced by the CADA manager, on an individual basis and as last resort, with a preliminary approval by the Prefect.

The payment of the monthly subsistence allowance (AMS) is also reduced or stopped when asylum seekers who are housed in reception centres (CADA) acquire some income during the process of their application for asylum (benefiting from a right to work thanks to another residence permit).<sup>276</sup>

Temporary allowance

The temporary waiting allowance (ATA) granted to those who are not accommodated in a reception centre can be withdrawn for instance:

- if an asylum seeker has been offered a place in a reception centre, whether he accepts it or not;<sup>277</sup> if OFPRA has given a negative decision for an asylum seeker under the accelerated procedure.

These reasons for withdrawal are implemented in practice. The 2009 Circular on the temporary allowance foresees that the names of the asylum seekers who have refused a place in a reception centre are transmitted on a monthly basis to Pole emploi (the French employment agency) which will as a result stop the payment of the allowance. Also, to enable Pole emploi to implement its monitoring,

<sup>276</sup> Article R348-4 of the social action and family code. For instance, during the course of the asylum procedure, they may obtain a residence permit on health grounds which may allow them to work.

OFPPRA sends monthly information about the state of the asylum applications (such as a withdrawal during the procedure) and the names of the applicants for whom a decision has been taken.<sup>278</sup>

When the suspension of the allowance had resulted from the absence of the required documents proving the entitlement to the allowance, Pole emploi can take a decision to re-instate the allowance when the situation has been regularized by the applicant.

Finally, the allowance can be withdrawn in case of fraud. In that case, the unduly received allowance has to be reimbursed. If an initial amicable settlement has failed, Pole emploi can transfer the file to the departmental authority which will start the collection procedure<sup>279</sup>. Asylum seekers can challenge such decisions at the administrative court within a 2 months period.

In their report published in September 2013, the General Controllers have also recommended to introduce new grounds to withdraw the benefit of the temporary allowance: the ATA allowance would not be granted to asylum seekers who have lodged their asylum claim more than 3 months after having entered the French territory (using the possibility opened by Article 20(2) of the recast Reception Conditions Directive) and to asylum seekers asking for a re-examination of their claim for the 2nd time.<sup>280</sup> These recommendations are being considered for the 2014 reform of the asylum procedure.

In French law, there is no official possibility to limit the reception conditions (such as the ATA allowance) because of a large number of arrivals. However, in practice, as described in "section 3. Types of accommodation", there is a serious shortage of places in reception centres in France. This situation leads to some impediment on access to these material reception conditions.

6. Access to reception centres by third parties

Indicators:

- Do family members, legal advisers, UNHCR and/or NGOs have access to reception centres?
 Yes       with limitations       No

In France, reception centres for asylum seekers are not closed centres. They are accessible to visitors of the family accommodated in the centres and to other stakeholders within the limits set by the rules of operation (usually subject to a preliminary notification of the manager). Many reception centres are managed by NGOs, whose staff is therefore present on a daily basis.

7. Addressing special reception needs of vulnerable persons

Indicators:

- Is there an assessment of special reception needs of vulnerable persons in practice?  Yes  No

There is no mechanism in France dedicated to the identification and care of vulnerable groups and persons with special reception needs. Some sort of identification of vulnerable persons is made during the social assessment carried out by the orientation platforms. Some motivated requests for an exceptional protection with an access to housing can be transmitted to the prefectures by the asylum seekers or the persons supporting them in their asylum application. Even if not regulated by law, some reception centres provide differentiated or separate reception facilities for vulnerable persons.

In practice, places in CADA reception centres are in fact mostly allocated to the most vulnerable asylum seekers (families with young children, pregnant women, and elderly asylum seekers). In 2013, 82.2% of the new arrivals in CADA reception centres are families.<sup>281</sup> This however has the side effect of marginalising isolated asylum seekers as young males are not considered as a priority.<sup>282</sup>

Unaccompanied children are housed in separate facilities managed by the departmental authorities (see types of accommodation, chapter on Reception). The NGO France terre d'asile has opened a specialised reception centre for unaccompanied asylum-seeking children, called Caomida (Reception and Orientation Centre for Asylum-seeking Unaccompanied Children), which has a national range.<sup>283</sup> The "Caomida" is located in the Val-de-Marne department (near Paris) and can accommodate 33 children (a very low number in comparison to the around 367 claims lodged by children in 2013) and provide them with a wide range of social, educational and legal services adapted to their specific needs. There is also a specialised centre at the department level managed by Coallia in Côtes-d'Armor (Samida).<sup>284</sup>

The French system does not foresee a specific ongoing monitoring mechanism to address special reception needs in case they appear during the asylum procedure. Social workers in reception centres have however in practice regular exchanges with the accommodated asylum seekers and may be able to identify these special fragilities should they appear during the reception phase. The staff's main difficulty, however, will be the identification of solutions to respond to this need (see section C. on health care) on the limited access to mental health care for instance).

According to the European Migration Network (EMN) study of March 2014 on the identification of victims of trafficking in human beings in international protection and forced return procedures<sup>285</sup>, there is a promising practice in improving the capacity for detection and identification of such victims in Paris. Based on a partnership agreement, since February 2013, the Association Foyer Jorbalan (AFJ) has provided a service staffed by volunteers every two weeks at the Paris initial orientation platform for isolated adults managed by the NGO FTDA. "This service primarily aims to enable the AFJ psychologist to assess situations of sexual exploitation which have been identified by FTDA officers. If the victim's psychological state allows, an interview aiming to identify whether the person is in fact a victim of THB may be carried out by an AFJ expert. This is based on three points in the potential victim's account: recruitment, transport and exploitation. Through this partnership work, the AFJ raises FTDA staff's awareness of THB in order to better detect possible cases in the future. This enables FTDA officials to learn about being attentive to certain signs during interviews with asylum seekers and to communicate with potential THB victims"<sup>286</sup>.

It is interesting to note that of the 324 third-country nationals who received a residence permit as a victim of trafficking in human beings in 2008-2012, nearly a quarter (76), had made an initial application for asylum which had been rejected.<sup>287</sup>

8. Provision of information

The provision of information for asylum seekers accommodated in reception centres (CADA) about the modalities of their reception is governed by the Circular on the missions of CADA centres of 19 August 2011.<sup>288</sup> Upon the admission in the CADA centres, the manager is tasked to deliver to the asylum seeker any useful information on the conditions of its stay in the centre, in a language that they understand and under the form of a welcome booklet. These modalities can vary in practice from one area to the other. In any case, core information about procedural rights during the asylum procedure are shared with the accommodated asylum seekers on a regular basis and upon request if necessary. Each centre also has its own information procedures. Generally, in a CADA centre managed by Forum réfugiés-Cosi for instance, the asylum seeker becomes aware of these legal reception provisions via the residence contract and operating rules they sign upon entry in the reception centre. On this occasion, an information booklet on the right to health is handed over to the asylum seeker. As some asylum seekers do not have an easy access to written information, more pedagogical collective information sessions through collective activities are also organised in reception centres managed by Forum réfugiés-Cosi.

9. Freedom of movement

Asylum seekers benefit from freedom of movement in France.

There is no country-wide dispersal system as the (freely chosen) place where asylum seekers apply for asylum (Prefectures) determines in most cases the area where reception will be offered.

Applicants cannot however choose which reception centre they will be offered a place (and cannot appeal the decision).

In France, the dispersal of asylum seekers in reception facilities is not linked to the stage in the procedure but rather to the types of procedure they are submitted to: asylum seekers in the regular procedure can normally<sup>289</sup> get access to regular reception centres whereas asylum seekers under the accelerated procedure will most likely be offered a place in the emergency reception scheme.<sup>290</sup>

The provision of reception conditions is regulated at national level and is coordinated on a day-to-day basis at local level. An exception to this rule is that, according to the 2011 circular<sup>291</sup>, when housing requests cannot be met at the departmental level, they are examined at the regional and national levels. In theory, 30% of the places available in reception centres have to be made available to the central administration in order to implement this national equalisation.<sup>292</sup>

French authorities make use of a national database 'Dispositif national d'accueil' (DNA - national reception scheme), "which records and stores information on new arrivals (inflows), outflows, occupation rates and waiting lists. Every three months, information from the DNA is sent to the competent authorities to inform them of reception availability”.<sup>293</sup> The European Migration Network (EMN) describes in its 2014 report that a good practice example is to be found in the local departmental network in Aude, which works as an informal coordination mechanism. “The network is managed at departmental level and includes all actors involved in the provision of reception in that region; e.g. the prefecture, the OFII, the managing association running the CADA reception facilities and emergency accommodation, and the departmental directorate for social cohesion and protection of the general public. This network convenes every month to assess capacity in reception facilities; to discuss and refer vulnerable persons to OFII and to exchange good practices and other information.”<sup>294</sup>

A similar coordination mechanism at the local level is in place in the Rhône Département to exchange every week on the available housing solutions. These IAC (Instance d’Admission Concertée – concerted admission board) meetings gathers all stakeholders involved in the issue of asylum seekers’ housing: Decentralised directorates for migration, for social cohesion, OFII and NGOs. The communication between all partners allows having an overview of the number of places available in various structures and – in a context of shortage of places - to collectively define the criteria for the prioritization of asylum seekers.

According to the internal rules of CADA centres, in theory any absence of more than 5 days should be authorised beforehand by the manager of the centre.

Once they have been allocated to a reception centre, asylum seekers are rarely asked to move as the type of reception centre does not change because of the stages in the procedure. Persons who benefit from reception offers at the start of their procedure may have to move from emergency facilities, possibly to a transit centre to finally settle in a regular reception centre (gradually progressing to more stable housing).

B. Employment and education

1. Access to the labour market

Indicators:

- Does the legislation allow for access to the labour market for asylum seekers?  Yes  No
- If applicable, what is the time limit after which asylum seekers can access the labour market:
1 year
- Are there restrictions to access employment in practice?  Yes  No

Access to the labour market is allowed only if the first instance determination authority (OFPRA – French Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless Persons) has not ruled on the asylum application within one year after the registration of the application and only if this delay cannot be attributed to the applicant. In this case, the asylum seeker is subjected to the rules of law applicable to third country national workers for the issuance of a temporary work permit.<sup>295</sup> This is also the case where an appeal is brought before the national Court of Asylum (CNDA), this time without any waiting period, and where the asylum seeker has obtained the renewal of their residence permit.<sup>296</sup>

In reality, asylum seekers have a very limited access to the labour market, due to a number of constraints. Prior to being able to work, the applicant must have sought and obtained a temporary work permit. To obtain this work permit, the asylum seeker has to provide a proof of a job offer or an employment contract. The duration of the work permit cannot exceed the duration of the residence permit associated with the asylum claim (3 months). It may possibly be renewed. The competent unit for these matters is the Regional Direction for companies, competition, consumption, work and employment (DIRECCTE – Ministry of Labour). In any case, the employment situation is constraining this right. In accordance with Article R. 341-4 of the Labour Code, the Prefect may take into account, to grant or deny a work permit, some elements of assessment such as "the current and future employment situation in the profession required by the foreign worker and the geographical area where he or she intends to exercise this profession". In France in early 2013, 30 fields of work were experiencing recruitment difficulties which justified allowing third country nationals to work in these without imposing restrictions. These professions are listed by region - only six professions are common to the whole country.<sup>297</sup>

Finally, asylum seekers have a lot of difficulties to access vocational training schemes as these are also subjected to the issuance of a work permit.

2. Access to education

Indicators:

- Does the legislation provide for access to education for asylum seeking children?  Yes  No
- Are children able to access education in practice?  Yes  No

While no provision of the Education Code covers the particular case of children of asylum seekers, the law provides that they are subject to compulsory education as long as they are between 6 and 16 years old,<sup>298</sup> on the same conditions as any foreign child. The primary school enrolment can be done at the local town hall. The enrolment in a secondary school (high schools) is made directly to the institution closest to the place of residence of the child. If the children seem to have a good enough command of the French language, the evaluation process will be supervised by a Counselling and Information Centre (Centres d'information et d'orientations – CIO). This state structure is dedicated to the educational guidance of all students.

When the children are not French-speaking or do not have a sufficient writing command of the language, their evaluations fall under the competency of the Academic Centre for Education of Newcomers and Travellers Children (CASNAV).<sup>299</sup> The test results will enable teachers to integrate the child within the dedicated schemes (e.g. Training in French adapted to non-native speakers (FLE) or initiation classes).

Education for asylum seeking children is usually provided in regular schools but can also sometimes be provided directly in reception centres (large emergency reception facilities for instance).

Barriers to an effective access to education are varied. Beyond the issue of the language level, there are also a limited number of specialised language training or initiation classes and limited resources dedicated to these schemes. This is an even more acute difficulty for reception centres in rural areas which simply do not have such classes. Besides, some schools require an address before enrolling children and this can be an issue for asylum seekers who do not have a personal address. Finally, access to education for children aged 16 to 18 is much more complicated as public schools do not have the obligation to accept them. They may be eligible for French courses offered by charities but the situation varies depending on the municipality. Access to apprenticeship is not possible as it would imply an access to a work permit that is usually not granted to asylum seekers. As a general rule, there is no training foreseen for adults. French language courses are organised in some reception centres depending on the availability of volunteers. Young adults and adults are often forced to put aside their career or training, pending the decision on their asylum application. For young people, this represents a considerable loss of time.

Finally, asylum seeking children with special needs are faced with the same difficulties imposed on children with special needs in general. Access to trained and specialised staff<sup>300</sup> tasked with supporting these children during their education in regular schools is very limited. For example, on 10 March 2014, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe has adopted a resolution tackling the issue of the difficult schooling of children with autism in France. The Committee noted that “in the case of autistic children and adults, even after the enactment of the Disabled Persons Policy Act of 30 June 1975, France has failed to achieve sufficient progress in advancing the provision of education for persons with autism.”<sup>301</sup>

C. Health care

Indicators:

- Is access to emergency health care for asylum seekers guaranteed in national legislation?
 Yes       No
- In practice, do asylum seekers have adequate access to health care?
 Yes       with limitations       No
- Is specialised treatment for victims of torture or traumatised asylum seekers available in practice?
 Yes       Yes, to a limited extent       No
- If material reception conditions are reduced/ withdrawn are asylum seekers still given access to health care?
 Yes       No

Asylum seekers in the regular procedure, like any other third-country nationals under a certain income level, have access to healthcare thanks to the universal healthcare insurance (CMU) system.<sup>302</sup> Asylum seekers are exempted from the 3 months residence requirement applied to other third country nationals. The request to benefit from the CMU is made to the social security services (CPAM) of the place of residence or domiciliation. The asylum seeker must submit documentary evidence of the regularity of their stay in France, marital status and the level of their resources.

Access to the CMU insurance is provided for free if the annual resources of the claimant do not exceed 9,534 Euros<sup>303</sup> per household. . In the absence of an official document attesting the level of resources, the claimant may make a sworn statement on the level of their resources.

Asylum seekers in an accelerated procedure or Dublin procedure, which are not eligible for the CMU because they do not have a temporary residence permit, can benefit from the state medical aid (AME).<sup>304</sup> Subsequent applicants will most likely benefit from the AME health coverage, as 88% of them are treated under the accelerated procedure. This medical aid is a social benefit for migrants who are not admitted to remain on the territory, enabling the beneficiaries to receive free treatments in hospitals as well as in any doctors' offices.<sup>305</sup>

On 1 March 2011, the access to the AME had been made conditional upon payment of an annual fee of 30 Euros per beneficiary but the French Parliament abolished this tax on 19 July 2012. It should be noted that access to the AME is possible only after 3 months of residence in France. The AME remains available to asylum seekers even if other reception conditions have been reduced or withdrawn.

Individuals with low income and who are still awaiting health insurance and needing healthcare quickly can turn to the All-Day Healthcare Centres (PASS) at their nearest public hospital. This is therefore also a possibility for asylum seekers under the accelerated and Dublin procedures. There, they will receive care and, if necessary, the medical letter needed to speed up the processing of their application for public health insurance. According to the law, all public hospitals are required to offer PASS services, but in practice, this does not always occur.

The Comede (Comité médical pour les exilés, a specialised NGO), the Health Ministry and the National Institute for Prevention and Health Education (INPES) have published in 2006 a handbook to help migrants understand the French public health care system. This handbook is available in 22 languages (bi-lingual presentation) and includes a lot of practical information on the access to health care in France.<sup>306</sup>

As a general rule, difficulties and delays for an effective access to healthcare vary from one city to the other in France. Access to the CMU goes rather well in the Rhone department (effective within a month), while there are long waiting periods to obtain access to the CMU in Nice (3 months in early 2014). The NGO Doctors of the world has reported that among the 2'226 asylum seekers they had received in their health centres (Caso) in 2012, only 11% of them were benefiting from the coverage of health insurance<sup>307</sup>. The main obstacles mentioned were the administrative difficulties, unawareness of their rights and the language barrier. 28% of them had declared having renounced to treatment during the past 12 months.

Finally, some of the problems with regards to medical care are not specific to asylum seekers. Some doctors are reluctant to receive and treat patients who benefit from the AME or CMU and tend to refuse taking appointments with them even though these refusals of care can in theory be punished.<sup>308</sup>

The NGO ODSE (Observatoire du droit à la santé pour les étrangers - Observatory for the right to health of foreigners) has sent a letter to the Health Minister Marisol Touraine on 21 February 2014 to alert her on a worrying situation in the Seine Saint Denis Département. The NGO has obtained an oral confirmation that an internal note of the health insurance services (CPAM) instructed its services not to work on the state medical aid (AME) requests lodged and not yet processed on 6 December 2013. The NGO strongly denounced this destocking technique that constitutes a serious denial of the rights of persons in precarious situations.<sup>309</sup>The national legislation does not guarantee any specific provision for access to care related to mental health issues. Asylum seekers can theoretically benefit from psychiatric or psychological counselling thanks to their health care covers (AME or CMU). However access remains difficult in practice because many professionals refuse to receive non-Francophone patients as they lack the tools to communicate non verbally and / or funds to work with interpreters.

In 2012, 84 % of the asylum seekers followed by the Comede have declared having been victims of violence (30% of acts of torture and 17% of gender-related violence).<sup>310</sup>

Besides, victims of torture or traumatised asylum seekers can be counselled in a few NGO structures that specifically take care of these traumas. This adapted counselling is provided at the Primo Levi

Centre in Paris as well as the Osiris centres in Marseille, Mana in Bordeaux, Forum réfugiés-Cosi Essor Centre in Lyon, Awel in La Rochelle for instance. These specialised centres are however too few in France, unevenly distributed across the country and cannot meet the growing demand for treatment.

The difficulties are in fact even more aggravated by the geographical locations of some reception centres where the possibility to access mental health specialists would mean several hours of transports.

The “regular” health system cannot currently cope with this adapted care for victims of torture and political violence. These regular structures lack time for consultations, funds for interpreters and training for professionals. The White Paper published by the association Primo Levi in June 2012 highlights the disparity between care supply and the demand from this population which is off-tracks of regular health priorities. Centres managed by NGOs are also often over-subscribed. According to the white paper, only 6 000 people are currently receiving appropriate support out of a total of 50 000 persons estimated to have been affected by torture (minimum estimation among the number of refugees living in France: 160 500 in 2010).<sup>311</sup>

To make up for this deficiency, Forum réfugiés-Cosi has set up in 2007 the first mental health centre (called ESSOR) in the Rhone area specialising in the treatment of and support to victims of torture and trauma resulting from the conditions of their exile. In 2013, almost 2,700 appointments have been conducted in this centre that provides a multidisciplinary approach where a doctor, psychologists, a physiotherapist and an art-therapist offer a comprehensive and multifaceted care to patients. An important feature of the proposed treatment is to allow the patient to express themselves in their own language, through interpretation.

Detention of Asylum Seekers

Despite a particularly worrisome situation in Mayotte, this issue could unfortunately not be treated in depth in this report.

Caveat: The asylum seekers covered in this section are the ones who have lodged a request for asylum while in a detention centre (asylum seekers are not present otherwise in detention centres).

A. General

Indicators:

- Total number of asylum seekers detained in the previous year (including those detained in the course of the asylum procedure and those who applied for asylum from detention): 1 140 persons applied for asylum while in administrative detention centres in 2012
- Number of detention centres: 25
- Total capacity: 1.711

There are 25 administrative detention centres (CRA) on France's territory (including in overseas departments). This amounts to a total 1 755 places (184 in the overseas departments).<sup>312</sup> The article R.- 553-3 of Ceseda foresees that each centre's capacity should not exceed 140 places. The maximum capacities for these centres are not reached in mainland France. However, even if the capacities are not exceeded, one should note that when the centres are almost full, this induces a lack of privacy which can be the source of tensions.

However, there is a very serious situation of overcrowding in Mayotte, an oversea island close to Madagascar.<sup>313</sup> Initially planned for 60 people, this centre has been used to detain around 140 persons for several years following orders from the local authorities. Through an order of 19 April 2012, the Prefecture has made official this capacity, thereby legitimising a chronic over-population of the CRA. A new prefectural order dated of 20 December 2012 has set the capacity to 100 persons (1,37m<sup>2</sup> per person<sup>314</sup>). In France, there is no policy for an automatic administrative detention of asylum seekers. In 2012, 1.140 third country nationals have lodged an asylum application while in administrative detention.<sup>315</sup> Most asylum seekers present in administrative detention centres are either third country nationals who lodged a claim while being detained or rejected asylum seekers who ask for a subsequent examination of their asylum claim. One should note however that, especially in the Paris region, newly arrived asylum seekers can be arrested and placed in administrative detention. This can happen when they have started the process to register their asylum claim and got arrested while waiting for the official confirmation of this registration. Indeed, in the Paris region, these procedures can take several weeks (waiting for a registered address through an association, waiting for the appointment at the prefecture) before a temporary residence permit is issued. These asylum seekers do not always have the necessary documents proving their pending registration with them when they get arrested. As a result, a removal decision can be taken and the person is placed in administrative detention and their claim may be processed from there. In practice, certain administrative courts order the release of such asylum seekers upon presentation of proof of steps taken on the territory to have their claim registered; but this is far from being automatic.<sup>316</sup>

B. Grounds for detention

Indicators:

- In practice, are most asylum seekers automatically detained
  - o on the territory:  Yes  No
  - o at the border:  Yes  No
- Are asylum seekers detained in practice during the Dublin procedure?
 Frequently (prior to the transfer to the responsible state)  Rarely  Never
- Are asylum seekers detained during a regular procedure in practice?
 Frequently  Rarely  Never
- Are unaccompanied asylum-seeking children detained in practice?
 Frequently  Rarely  Never
- If frequently or rarely, are they only detained in border/transit zones?
 Yes  No
- Are asylum seeking children in families detained in practice?
 Frequently  Rarely  Never
- What is the maximum detention period set in the legislation (inc extensions): 45 days
- In practice, how long in average are asylum seekers detained? Not available

In France, there is no policy for an automatic administrative detention of asylum seekers. Persons are placed in administrative detention centres only for the purpose of removal.<sup>317</sup> However, the persons who claim asylum during their period of administrative detention are not automatically freed (almost never) as a result of this request. They remain in administrative detention during the examination of their claim. These cases are mostly examined through an accelerated procedure.

With the exception of those who ask for asylum from a detention centre, asylum seekers in France are not likely to spend their status determination procedure in detention. The legal framework however enables the placement in administrative detention of asylum seekers under an accelerated procedure from the moment they receive a rejection from OFPRA (French Office for the Protection of Refugees and Stateless People) at first instance and a return decision has been made consequently (even if they lodge an appeal against the decision).<sup>318</sup> This decision of administrative detention placement is taken upon an individual assessment by the prefect of the Departement. In practice, it appears that few asylum seekers in the accelerated procedure who await a reply on their appeal from the CNDA (National Court of Asylum) are detained.

Asylum seekers under the Dublin procedure can be placed in administrative detention with a view to the enforcement of their transfer once the re-admission decision has been notified. In that context, there is no official guideline as to what the risk of absconding referred to in Article 28 of the Recast Dublin III Regulation is. If Dublin asylum seekers are declared as "missing" because they have not been transferred during the 6 months period and they are stopped during a random identity check during the 18 months period, they will most probably be placed in detention directly as the risk of absconding would seem high.

In the law, there is no rule excluding some categories of asylum seekers from the application of decisions concerning detention placement. In theory unaccompanied children cannot be returned and therefore cannot be detained as a consequence.<sup>319</sup> Nevertheless, it is important to stress that in 2012, the five NGOs working in administrative detention centres have met 300 detained persons who declared themselves to be children. These were young persons whose age had been disputed by the authorities and had been considered as adults, as a result of a medical exam for instance.<sup>320</sup>

In addition, for persons with health issues, the doctor in the administrative detention centre can seize the local healthcare referee who will issue a recommendation on the compatibility of the administrative detention and removal with the state of health of the person. The prefect is not forced to follow this recommendation. A person can remain in administrative detention for a maximum of forty-five days.<sup>321</sup> Very few removals actually take place after the end of the 32nd day of administrative detention (398 foreigners have been returned between the 32nd day and the 45th day, i.e. 4% of the removals) and, therefore, many stakeholders argue that prolonging the detention after 30 days is not decisive.<sup>322</sup> The decision of placement in administrative detention taken by the administration is valid for five days. Beyond this period, a request before the judge of freedom and detention has to be lodged by the prefect to prolong the administrative detention duration.<sup>323</sup> This judiciary judge can order an extension of the administrative detention for an extra twenty days after the initial placement. The foreigner's rights are thus guaranteed thanks to this jurisdictional control – only however, if the person is presented in front of the judge before being returned.<sup>324</sup> The second prolongation for twenty days is only granted under certain conditions, in particular if the persons deliberately obstruct their return by withholding their identity, the loss or destruction of travel documents<sup>325</sup> or the fact that despite the goodwill of the executing administration, the removal measure has not yet been finalised. Beyond this period of 45 days, the foreigner who has not been removed must be released.<sup>326</sup> The length of stay of asylum seekers (those who have claimed asylum in administrative detention centres) is difficult to assess but on average, the third country nationals remain 11 days in administrative detention centres (an increasing average from 9.7 days in 2011 and 10 days in 2012).<sup>327</sup> There are no cases of persons detained beyond a period of 45 days.

The General Controller of places of freedom deprivation, together with many French NGOs, has repeatedly called for a return to a maximum length of detention of 32 days.<sup>328</sup>

The law on immigration and asylum (Ceseda) foresees three types of alternatives to administrative detention:

<sup>321</sup> Originally set at a maximum of 7 days, the length of administrative detention has been extended to 32 days in 2003 and to 45 days in 2011.

<sup>322</sup> The "Fekl report" recommends to reduce the length of administrative detention to 30 days (page 54). Report to the Prime minister, "Sécuriser les parcours des ressortissants étrangers en France", Matthias Fekl, 14 May 2013, page 43.

<sup>324</sup> The JLD (Judge of freedoms and detention) who, prior to the reform, used to intervene after 48 hours has seen its role greatly reduced since it now intervenes only at the end of the 5th day of retention, which makes possible the return of a person before the judicial court has had time to exert its control.

<sup>325</sup> The person can also be prosecuted for obstruction to his removal on the grounds of non-communication of the document enabling the return.

a) House arrest in the case of an absence of reasonable prospects of removal:<sup>329</sup> The law foresees a house arrest for a maximum period of six months (renewable once or several times, within the total limit of one year) when “the foreigner can justify being unable to leave the French territory or can neither go back to his country of origin, nor travel to any other country” and that as a result, the execution of the removal measure is compromised on medium or long term.

b) House arrest as an alternative to administrative detention:<sup>330</sup> The Prefect can put under house arrest for a period of 45 days, renewable once, those people who can produce representation guarantees and whose removal is postponed only for technical reasons (absence of identification, of travel documents, or of means of transport). When foreigners subjected to a return decision and who are accompanied by their minor children, do not have a stable address (decent housing within legal conditions), it is possible to envisage a house arrest in hotel-like facilities.

c) House arrest with electronic monitoring for parents of minor children residing in France for 45 days (this measure is not implemented as far as we know).<sup>331</sup>

The law does not foresee an obligation to prove the impossibility to set up alternative measures before deciding to detain third country nationals. If the person can present guarantees of representation and unless proved to the contrary, house arrest should be given priority but a necessity and proportionality test is not really implemented. It appears that the 'prefectures' hardly resort to these alternative measures, which are only a possibility left to the discretion of the administration. In practice, placement in administrative detention remains the rule and the French authorities resort to this quasi systematically.<sup>332</sup> In 2012, 288 asylum seekers who were present in administrative detention centres in France had been placed subsequently under house arrest (242 of them were a judicial decision and 42 of them were an administrative decision). While calling for an increased use of alternatives to administrative detention, many NGOs raised some concerns with regards to the (lack of) access to legal and social support for people placed under house arrest.

Since the 6 July 2012 circular<sup>333</sup> dealing with the removal of families accompanied by children, Prefects are encouraged to make house arrest a rule, and limit (but do not prohibit) the placement of children with their families in administrative detention to a last resort measure (it is important to note that the circular is not applicable to Mayotte).<sup>334</sup> This principle was already foreseen in the Ceseda following the 2011 amendment of the law.

The placement of families with children in administrative detention had constantly increased since 2004 but for the first time, an important drop in numbers has been noticed in 2012. The five NGOs working in the administrative detention centres have recorded a total of 52 families<sup>335</sup> (85 adults and 99 children) detained in these centres in 2012 (for an average length of stay of 3 days)<sup>336</sup>. The 6 July 2012 circular has proved to be efficient: 50 families had been detained before 5 July and 2 families had been detained (in mainland France) afterwards. Overall in 2012, 52% of these families have been released,

As a side note, it should be noted that 2 575 children have been detained in the administrative detention centre of Mayotte.

8% have been put under house arrest and 40% have been expelled to their country of origin or readmitted to another EU country.<sup>337</sup>

The placement of children in administrative detention has however not totally stopped. The NGO La Cimade has reported that a couple from Chechnya and their 2 years old child have spent 2 days in the administrative detention centre in Nimes between 22 and 24 January 2014. The administrative court has released the family, stating that the Prefect should have given priority to a house arrest solution.<sup>338</sup>

Administrative detention centres are controlled and managed by the police (the border police) Under the law, these administrative detention centres are not part of the regular prison administration. Placement in an administrative detention centre results from an administrative decision (not a judicial decision). The persons held in administrative detention, and who have asked for asylum, are generally not released. Despite being held together with other third country nationals, they are never held with common law criminals or prisoners.

Police staff working in the detention centres do not receive a specific training with regards to asylum law.

Article R. 553-3 of Ceseda frames the conditions of administrative detention. They must meet the following standards :

- 1° A minimum usable surface of 10m<sup>2</sup> per detainee comprising bedrooms and spaces freely accessible during opening hours ;
- 2° Collective bedrooms (separation men/women) for a maximum of six persons ;
- 3° Sanitary facilities, including wash-hand basins, showers and toilets, freely accessible and of sufficient number, namely one sanitary block for 10 detainees ;
- 4° A telephone for fifty detainees freely accessible ;
- 5° Necessary facilities and premises for catering ;
- 6° Beyond forty persons detained, a recreational and leisure room distinct from the refectory, which is at least 50m<sup>2</sup>, increased by 10m<sup>2</sup> for fifteen extra detainees ;
- 7° One or several rooms medically equipped, reserved for the medical team ;
- 8° Premises allowing access for visiting families and the consulate authorities ;

<sup>338</sup> La Cimade Rétention : des enfants toujours enfermés en 2014 (Administrative detention: children still held in 2014) , 31 January 2014

- 9° Premises reserved for lawyers ;
- 10° Premises allocated to the OFII (French Office for Immigration and Integration)<sup>339</sup> ;
- 11° Premises, furnished and equipped with a telephone allocated to the NGOs present in the centre ;
- 12° An open-air area ;
- 13° A luggage room.

Men and women held in detention centres have separated living spaces (“zones de vie”). The set-up of the rooms varies from one detention centre to the other, ranging from 2 to 6 persons per room. Rooms are in any case never private and in some centres, the ‘General Controller’ of places of freedom deprivation has found that the shared rooms did not have a distinct sanitary facility.<sup>340</sup>

Overall, the administrative detention conditions are deemed adequate in France (mainland) but there are variations. For instance, the administrative detention centre of Nice is described as ill-adapted to the mission (it had been built for the army a century ago) – the place is so small that it is often difficult to pass each other in the corridors.<sup>341</sup> The location of certain centres (noise pollution due to the proximity of the airport runways) as well as their conception can result in difficult living conditions. The Council of Europe's Committee for the prevention of torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment (CPT) has published in 19 April 2012 its observations following its visit in the administrative detention centres (CRA) of Rouen-Oissel and Paris-Vincennes in November 2010.<sup>342</sup> While noting that the delegation had not received any complaint about degrading treatment and that the open door policy in force in the 3 centres visited had to be welcomed, the report stresses that the heating was deemed insufficient. The CPT had also recommended that the provision of psychological care had to be reinforced.

According to the ‘General Controller’ of places of freedom deprivation, while the capacity of the CRAs does not call for major criticism, “the maintenance of the premises, inevitably subject to severe degradations, leaves a great deal to be desired. [...] A state of disrepair (broken lights, unusable window closures, blocked pipes, odours...) is present in many of the centres visited”.<sup>343</sup> The presence of rats is described in several centres. In an interview to the French Press Agency (AFP) on 20 February 2014, one of the persons held in the detention centre in Marseille stated that the temperatures are so cold at night that it is difficult to sleep and that there are rats and dirt.<sup>344</sup>

The Controller also revealed in 2011 that the material conditions for preparing meals were often flawed (the clean circuits were not distinct from the dirty circuits...) and the quality and even the quantity served were insufficient. In addition, “none of the centres visited served dishes suitable to religious instructions of a great number of persons detained”.<sup>345</sup>

The issue of meals is often a topic raising tensions in the centres. In the centre in Palaiseau (near Paris) for instance, the persons held frequently complain that the meals provided are served with non-halal meat, in contradiction with the fact that the internal rule of operation mentions the respect for dietary habits.<sup>346</sup>

The state of the administrative detention centre in Mayotte is dramatically more preoccupying. In 2011, it was not yet equipped with mattresses, tables or chairs and the persons were reduced to remain standing up or on the ground. Therefore, on 20 February 2012, the administrative court of Mamoudzou declared<sup>347</sup> that the conditions at the CRA in Mayotte were so bad that they represented inhuman and degrading treatment for the detainees.

Sanitary and social support is provided by medical and nursing staff. Their availability varies from one centre to the other (from 2 days to 7 days a week). The care is given by doctors and nurses who belong to an independent hospital staff. They are grouped in medical administrative detention centres (UMCRA).<sup>348</sup> In principle, each person placed in administrative detention is seen by the nurse upon arrival. The person is seen by the doctor upon request or on the request of the nurses, in principle within 2 days of arrival. According to the 2012 report of the five NGOs working in CRA centres, some people suffering from serious psychological problems are held in detention centres. The threshold to determine that a health status is incompatible with the administrative detention seems to vary a lot depending on the doctors and the detention centres.<sup>349</sup> In case of high-risk pregnancy, doctors of the UMCRA may provide certificate stating the incompatibility of the health of the person with the placement in administrative detention – but this is not automatic. There is no specific mechanism to identify vulnerable persons or persons with special reception needs while in detention.

The practical problems observed regarding the access to healthcare relate to a lack of consideration for psychological or psychiatric problems of the detainees.<sup>350</sup> Dozens of suicide attempts are reported each year in these centres. Noting the weakness and the variations in the availability of psychiatric care in the French administrative detention centres, the 'General Controller' of places of freedom deprivation has recommended in 2014 that these centres and the relevant hospitals set up agreements by which mental health care would be accessible. He added that the regular presence of psychiatrists (be they independent or from hospitals) within the detention centres should be systematic.<sup>351</sup>

Another issue is the lack of medical confidentiality. For instance, the General Controller of places of deprivation of freedom observed in 2011 that medical files were located in places accessible to all, (for example the doors of the healthcare stations were left open, sometimes allowing hearing the exchanges between carers and patients).<sup>352</sup>

Separate places are provided for families in the 10 centres, which are duly authorised. Access to education is not foreseen in France in CRA since children are not supposed to stay there. However, the prohibition of administrative detention for children is only applicable to unaccompanied children; children with their families (although it should be exceptional as of July 2012) can be detained for 45 days without access to educational activities.

Access to open-air areas depends on the facilities. The facilities built after 2006 have become prison-like. In the majority of the centres, no activity is provided. Depending on the CRAs, there may be a TV room (sometimes out of order or only broadcasting programs in French language), a few board games, a table football or even several ping pong tables but, in any event, this proves to be very insufficient when the administrative detention can last up to 45 days.<sup>353</sup> The lack of activity and boredom are the day to day reality of the persons held in these centres. The detainees can in principle keep their mobile phones if they do not include camera equipment. Most people are therefore not authorised to keep their phones and the police refuses to authorise them even if the detainees offer to break the camera tool.

Detainees may have access to reading material, depending on the centre they are held into but computers are never made available. Finally, detainees can have contacts with people during the restricted visit hours.

Five NGOs<sup>354</sup> are present quasi-permanently (5 to 6 days a week) in the centres as a result of their mission of information towards foreigners and the assistance to exercise their rights (see more information in the section on access to information).

In addition, some people enjoy free access to the CRAs: the Commissioner for Human Rights of the Council of Europe; the members of the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture ; the French and European Members of Parliament; the General Controller of places of freedom deprivation; the 'Prefects' ; public prosecutors and the judges of freedom and administrative detention. Some others have a more limited access: Consulates staff; lawyers; families of persons held.<sup>355</sup> Only families (or friends) are subjected to restricted hours. . An instruction from 1st December 2009 foresees that visits have to be authorised for a minimum duration of 30 minutes. In Marseille, however, the frequent lack of police staff in the detention centre leads the police to decide to focus on the surveillance rather than providing the opportunity for the visits to take place. Family visits are therefore sometimes simply cancelled for the morning.

Since 2011, some accredited NGOs<sup>356</sup> can have access to all CRAs (two NGOs have been accredited so far: Forum réfugiés-Cosi and France Terre d'asile). These accredited NGO representatives must inform the head of department of the CRA, at least twenty-four hours prior to their planned visit and agree with them on the practical details of their visit beforehand.<sup>357</sup> The NGOs which have access to the CRAs should not hinder the functioning of the centre. The Minister in charge of immigration sets the list of accredited associations able to propose representatives.<sup>358</sup> Accreditation can only be requested by NGOs regularly registered for at least five years and working on, according to their statutes, the protection of foreigners, the defence of human rights or medical and social assistance. UNHCR does not have a specific access to the centres in France

Finally, in cases where alternatives to detention are implemented (persons under house arrest), the key question of the exercise of rights of these persons is still to be dealt with in France. In fact, persons put under house arrest have neither access to information and free administrative and legal assistance by a specialised association, nor formalised social support and free health care.

In July 2013, two journalists (from Rue89 and AFP) were able to visit the administrative detention centre in Lyon together with two French MEPs in the framework of a project on access to detention centres (Open Access Now).<sup>359</sup> Other visits have taken place later in the year, such as in the administrative detention centre of Nice on 30 October 2013. The Ministry of Interior is currently examining the possibility of a decree enacting the access for journalists to all places of deprivation of freedom if accompanying members of parliament. The Minister of Interior had announced that the decree would be

D. Procedural safeguards and judicial review of the detention order

Indicators:

- Is there an automatic review of the lawfulness of detention?  Yes  No

The persons held in administrative detention centres are informed about the reasons for their placement in these centres through the notification of the administrative decision to detain them with a view to their removal. This notification must state clearly which removal ground serves as a basis for the detention and why it cannot be implemented immediately. This document also mentions the legal challenges available to contest this decision. According to the law<sup>361</sup>, this decision should be notified (orally) to the third-country national in a language they understand but this is not always the case in reality.

The 'Controller General' of places of freedom deprivation has also highlighted in 2013 some deficiencies with regards to the information provided to asylum seekers while in administration detention. His recommendations included: to make compulsory the dissemination of explanatory brochures about the asylum procedure (in several languages) addressing persons in detention and staff working in detention centres; to insist on the mandatory nature of the transmission of the asylum claim to OFPRA, even if it is submitted late; and to ensure that an interpreter is available to assist asylum seekers with the procedure.<sup>362</sup>

The impact of detention on the overall quality of the asylum procedure is considerable. Preparing an asylum application in a place of confinement can be very difficult: very limited time to develop the reasons for the claim (5 days), no free access to an interpreter to write the application in French, dysfunctions during the transmission from the centre to OFPRA which jeopardise the confidentiality, stressful conditions prior to the interview with OFPRA, difficulties to locate and gather the necessary evidence, etc.

The administration requires that the person detained lodges their application for asylum within 5 days after placement in administrative detention (the deadline is set at midnight on the 5th day). OFPRA has then 96 hours<sup>363</sup> to examine the request. This extremely brief period of time drastically reduces the chances of benefiting from an in-depth examination of the claim. The systematic placement in accelerated procedures of asylum seekers in administrative detention is also very questionable. The administration frequently considers that the only purpose of the request is to prevent the execution of the removal. Indeed, France is yet to enact rules drawing lessons from the European Court of Human Rights decision in the IM vs. France case, where the Court found that "while the remedies of which the applicant had made use had been available in theory, their accessibility in practice had been limited by a number of factors, relating mainly to the automatic registration of his application under the fast-track procedure".<sup>364</sup>

<sup>364</sup> European Court of Human Rights, I.M. v. France (application no. 9152/09), 2 February 2012

French law foresees a judicial review of the lawfulness of the administrative detention: an administrative judge controls the legality of the administrative decisions of detention and removal and a judicial judge examines the conformity of the deprivation of freedom.

- The administrative judge is seized by the foreigner (the asylum seeker if relevant) who contests the legality of the decisions taken by the Prefect: the measures of removal and/or administrative detention placement.<sup>365</sup> Measures of placement in administrative detention can be challenged within a period of 48 hours. This period starts from the moment when the measure is notified (and not from the arrival at the administrative detention centre). The administrative judge can for example verify that the Prefect has not committed a gross error of appreciation by choosing administrative detention rather than house arrest. The administrative judge must rule within 72 hours.
- The judge of freedoms and detention – whose competences are set out in article 66 of the Constitution – is seized by the Prefect at the end of the 5 days of administrative detention in order to authorise a prolongation after having examined the lawfulness of the administrative detention. For example, they will check whether the police have respected the procedure and the rights of the person during the arrest, the legality of the police custody and the placement into administrative detention. He will also check that the custody is compatible with the personal situation of the detainee.<sup>366</sup> This judge can also be seized at any moment by the person detained in administrative detention centres but these requests have to be very solidly argued (serious health problems for instance) and are hardly considered admissible<sup>367</sup>.

Presentation in front of these two judges is not systematic. Appeals lodged solely against the measure of placement in administrative detention do not suspend the execution of the removal. It happens that persons are returned even though a hearing in front of the judge had been set. In fact, the law only provides for a suspensive effect for appeals against a removal decision. Challenging decisions of placement in administrative detention and of all other measures linked to a removal decision does not guarantee a possibility to see an administrative judge.

These two challenges are independent from each other. Before 2011, the judge of freedoms and of detention (JLD) used to rule before the administrative judge. Since the inversion of the interventions of the judges in July 2011, there is absolutely no control regarding the legality of administrative detention for the cases of those persons removed before the hearing with the judge of freedoms and of detention (as the administrative judge only looks at the legality of the decisions taken by the Prefect).

In practice it meant that the 5,935 persons who have been removed during the first 5 days (62 % of the 9,636 removals carried out in 2012) have not been able to see the JLD judge<sup>368</sup> and therefore did not benefit from a judicial review. This figure is even more impressive in French overseas departments where 96% of the removals are carried out during these first 5 days.<sup>369</sup>

This is emphasised as a problem by many NGOs as the causes of irregularity of a judicial procedure are far more frequent than the causes of illegality of an administrative act.

In the context of a reform discussed in 2013, many NGOs and other stakeholders (see the recommendations in the report from Member of Parliament Matthias Fekl) have pleaded for going back to an earlier access to a judicial review.

E. Legal assistance

Indicators:

- Does the law provide for access to free legal assistance for the review of detention?
 Yes       No
- Do asylum seekers have effective access to free legal assistance in practice?
 Yes       No

Legal assistance for persons held in administrative detention (including asylum seekers) is provided by law. Currently, five NGOs which assist foreigners are authorised, by agreement (public procurement) with the Ministry of Interior, to provide “on duty” legal advice in the administrative detention centres (CRAs). They inform the foreigners (including asylum seekers) and help them to exercise their rights during the detention procedure (hearings in front of the judge, filing of an appeal, request for legal aid...).<sup>370</sup> These NGOs are present in the administrative detention centres quasi-permanently (5 to 6 days a week). Some of these NGOs have set aside some budget to resort to interpreters to assist detainees who do not speak French or English, whereas some others resort to volunteers.

As for the assistance given by lawyers, the legislation foresees that the asylum seeker held in detention can be assisted by a lawyer for their appeals [during the hearing] in front of the administrative court or for their presentation in front of the judge of freedoms and detention. Therefore, for the prolongation of administrative detention by the judge of freedoms and detention, article R.552-6 of Ceseda foresees that “the foreigner is informed of their right to choose a lawyer. The judge can appoint one automatically if the foreigner so requests”. Within the context of the procedure in front of the Administrative Court, “the foreigner can, at the latest at the start of the hearing, ask for a lawyer to be appointed automatically. They are informed by the Clerk of the Court at the time of the beginning of their request.”<sup>371</sup>

With regards to the confidentiality granted to the discussions between lawyers and their clients when they meet within the detention centres, the situation can vary from one centre to the other. An office with frosted windows is usually provided. It is however very rare that lawyers agree to go to the detention centres (detention centres are usually located quite far from the city centres). In Strasbourg for instance, the NGO Ordre de Malte has found that only three lawyers had met with their clients for the whole year of 2012. Lawyers can easily contact their clients by calling a public phone or by calling the NGO present in the centre that will make sure the call is forwarded to the detainee.
