ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This report is jointly researched and written by aditus foundation and the Jesuit Refugee Service (Malta) and was edited by ECRE.

We would like to thank the Office of the Refugee Commissioner, the Refugee and Appeals Board and the Malta Police Force for their cooperation in providing the requested data and information.

This report is up-to-date until May 2014.

The AIDA project

The AIDA project is jointly coordinated by the European Council on Refugees and Exiles (ECRE), Forum Réfugiés-Cosi, Irish Refugee Council and the Hungarian Helsinki Committee. It aims to provide up-to date information on asylum practice in 14 EU Member States (AT, BE, BG, DE, FR, GR, HU, IE, IT, MT, NL, PL, SE, UK) which is easily accessible to the media, researchers, advocates, legal practitioners and the general public through the dedicated website www.asylumineurope.org. Furthermore the project seeks to promote the implementation and transposition of EU asylum legislation reflecting the highest possible standards of protection in line with international refugee and human rights law and based on best practice.

This report is part of the AIDA project (Asylum Information Database) funded by the European Programme for Integration and Migration (EPIM). Additional research for the second update of this report was developed with financial support from the Fundamental Rights and Citizenship Programme of the European Union (FRAME Project). The contents of the report are the sole responsibility of aditus Foundation, JRS Malta and ECRE and can in no way be taken to reflect the views of the European Commission.

Overview of the main changes since the previous report update

The report was previously updated in January 2014.

- In December of 2013, the European Court of Human Rights judgements *Suso Musa v. Malta*¹ and *Aden Ahmed v. Malta*² became final. The two judgements assessed Malta's detention policy in terms of Article 5, whilst Aden Ahmed also delved into living conditions compatibility with Article 3. In both cases the Court found Malta to be in breach of the Convention, and in Suso it indicated general measures Malta is required to take in order to prevent other similar violations in the future.
- In 2013, the Office of the Refugee Commissioner shifted the level of protection granted to Syrian asylum-seekers, mainly by eliminating the distinction made earlier between Syrians reaching Malta after the start of the conflict and those who had been living in Malta prior to the start of the hostilities.

In a number of cases in 2013 the Refugee Appeals Board disagreed with the assessment that the harm feared by Syrian asylum-seekers rendered them eligible only for Temporary Humanitarian Protection. First-instance decisions were therefore overturned and the asylum-seekers concerned granted subsidiary protection. At around this same time, all Syrian applicants who had been granted THP had their protection changed to subsidiary protection. Currently, all Syrian applicants who prove their Syrian nationality are granted, as a minimum, subsidiary protection. A number of persons have also been recognised as refugees.

- There are currently 2 immigration detention facilities in use, 1 in Safi Barracks – B Block – and 1 in Lyster Barracks – Hermes Block. The facilities known as the Warehouses in Safi Barracks were closed for refurbishment at the beginning of 2014 and have not been used since. All the facilities are used to detain both asylum-seekers and immigrants awaiting removal. At the end of 2013, there were around 500 detainees, with more than 1,900 individuals passing through detention throughout the year.³

5. Short overview of the asylum procedure

Applications for international protection are to be lodged with the Refugee Commissioner, as the Office of the Refugee Commissioner (RefCom) is the authority responsible for examining and determining applications for international protection at first instance.⁴ The procedure in place is a single procedure with the examination and determination of eligibility for subsidiary protection being undertaken by the Refugee Commissioner within the context of the same procedure. The Refugee Commissioner is the only entity authorised by law to receive applications for international protection. Should the individual express a need for international protection at the border, this information is passed on to the Refugee Commissioner for the necessary follow-up.

The initial stages of the procedure require the filling in of a form known as the Preliminary Questionnaire (PQ) which asylum-seekers are asked to complete following an information session given by RefCom staff members. The PQ is considered to be the registration of the asylum-seeker's desire to seek international protection. If, at this stage, an individual provides information that, prima facie, renders him eligible for a transfer to another EU Member State in terms of the Dublin II Regulation, the examination of the application for protection is suspended pending the outcome of the Dublin procedure. It is pertinent to note that although the Refugee Commissioner is designated as the head of the Dublin Unit, the immigration police are charged with implementing the Dublin procedure in practice.

Following the initial collection of information in the PQ, an appointment is scheduled for an interview with the applicant. Once the applicant is called for the interview he is first asked to fill in an Application Form that contains questions similar to those previously answered in the PQ. The application form is considered to be the official application for international protection. Then the recorded interview takes place and the applicant is informed at the end of the interview that he will be notified of the decision in due course.

National law specifies a two-week time period from when an applicant is notified of the decision of the Refugee Commissioner, during which they may appeal to the Refugee Appeals Board. This Board, an administrative tribunal set up in terms of the Refugees Act which is currently made up of six chambers, is entrusted to hear and determine appeals against recommendations issued by the Refugee Commissioner. The Refugees Act specifies that the Minister may also lodge an appeal against the recommendation at First Instance.⁵ An appeal to the Board has suspensive effect such that an asylum-seeker may not be removed from Malta prior to a final decision being taken on his appeal.⁶

The Refugees Act specifies that no appeal is possible from the decision of the Refugee Appeals Board, although it is possible to submit a judicial review application to the First Hall of the Civil Court⁷. Notwithstanding, no appeal lies on the merits of the decision except the possibility of filing a human rights claim alleging a violation of fundamental human rights in terms of the European Convention on Human Rights and/or the Maltese Constitution should the rejected appellant be faced with a return that is prejudicial to their rights.⁸

The above refers to the regular procedure employed in adjudicating the majority of applications for international protection. Accelerated procedures are also foreseen in national law for applications that appear to be prima facie inadmissible or manifestly unfounded. All applicants for asylum are interviewed by the Refugee Commissioner although their case might be classified as being inadmissible following an evaluation of their asylum claim. In such cases, the accelerated procedure kicks in at appeal stage. The recommendation of the Refugee Commissioner is transmitted to the Refugee Appeals Board with the Board having a three-day time-limit, specified at law, during which an examination and review of the Refugee Commissioner's recommendation is to be carried out.⁹

⁵ Refugees Act, Article 7.

⁶ Procedural Standards in Examining Applications for Refugee Status Regulations (Procedural Regulations), Subsidiary Legislation 420.07, Regulation 12.

The procedure for determining applications for international protection from detained applicants is identical to that for applicants who are not detained. In practice, detention and the asylum procedure are inextricably linked as an applicant's detention duration is related primarily to the time required to finalise the application. Asylum-seekers who arrive in Malta without the required documentation, therefore being classified as 'prohibited immigrants', are detained upon arrival in immigration detention facilities. Their application for protection is examined while they are in detention. If the Refugee Commissioner accepts their application and they are granted international protection they are released from detention. In the case that an application is not finally determined within twelve months from arrival in Malta, the individual will also be released.

If the final decision, at appellate stage is a rejection of an individual's application for protection, the individual may be returned to the relevant country of origin. As detention may not exceed eighteen months, if removal is not effected within this time, a failed asylum-seeker will be released upon the lapse of eighteen months in detention.¹⁰

⁹ Refugees Act, arts 23 & 24.

¹⁰ This is regulated in the 2005 Policy document 'Irregular Immigrants, Refugees and Integration Policy Document' published by the Ministry for Justice and Home Affairs & Social Solidarity and Regulation 11(8) of the Returns Regulations, although this will be elaborated on below.

B. Procedures

1. Registration of the Asylum Application

Indicators :

- Are specific time limits laid down in law for asylum-seekers to lodge their application?
 Yes No
- If so, and if available specify
 - o the time limit at the border: N/A
 - o the time limit on the territory: 60 days
 - o the time limit in detention: N/A
- Are there any reports (NGO reports, media, testimonies, etc) of people refused entry at the border and returned without examination of their protection needs? Yes No

The authority responsible for registering asylum applications in Malta is the Refugee Commissioner (RefCom). The RefCom is also the authority responsible for taking decisions at first instance on asylum applications.¹¹

An asylum application shall not be valid unless made within 60 days of the arrival of the applicant in Malta. The consequence for not adhering to this time limit is the invalidity of the application; however, an application may be allowed after the lapse of 60 days for special and exceptional reasons.¹² An application that is filed after the lapse of 60 days may also be considered to be manifestly unfounded by the RefCom, by virtue of which an accelerated procedure to examine the application is applied.¹³ Whether a late application is to be considered invalid or manifestly unfounded is at the discretion of the RefCom.

With respect to asylum-seekers who arrive undocumented by boat, the registration of their asylum application is relatively unhindered since these are almost immediately intercepted, registered and channelled into the detention system where everyone is given the opportunity to apply for asylum. On the other hand, with respect to asylum-seekers who arrive documented but who do not express a wish to apply for asylum to the immigration officials present or who become refugees sur place, problems may arise as a result of the fact that they could not readily know how or where to apply for asylum.

Generally, due to the particular circumstances of persons arriving by boat, asylum applications are registered a few days or – at most – a couple of weeks after arrival by boat. The applications of persons approaching RefCom directly are immediately registered.

Applications must be made at the Office of the Refugee Commissioner. Any person approaching any other public entity, particularly the Malta Police Force, expressing their wish to seek asylum, these are referred to the RefCom. Detained asylum-seekers complete a Preliminary Questionnaire that indicates their intention to seek asylum, which is followed by the formal application that is completed during their first interview with RefCom case-workers.

On 9th July 2013, Malta threatened to return to Libya a group of asylum-seekers, before granting them access to the asylum procedure. The return was stopped when a group of NGOs filed a Rule 39

¹¹ Refugees Act, Article 4 (3).

¹² Procedural Regulations, Regulation 4 (4).

¹³ Refugees Act, Article 2.

application before the European Court of Human Rights, eventually resulting in a cancellation of the planned return operation. All the asylum-seekers were also granted access to the asylum procedure¹⁴.

2. Regular procedure

General (scope, time limits)

Indicators:

- Time limit set in law for the determining authority to make a decision on the asylum application at first instance (in months): none
- Are detailed reasons for the rejection at first instance of an asylum application shared with the applicant in writing? Yes No
- As of 31st December 2013, the number of cases for which no final decision (including at first appeal) was taken one year after the asylum application was registered: 32

As such there is no time limit set in law for the Refugee Commissioner to take a decision on the asylum application. However, the law states that when the Commissioner cannot make a recommendation within 6 months, the applicant should be informed of the delay or receive, upon his request, information on the time frame within which the decision is to be expected. However, such information does not constitute an obligation for the Commissioner to take a decision within that time frame.¹⁵ Most of the decisions taken by the Refugee Commissioner are, in practice, taken before the lapse of 6 months.

The Refugee Commissioner is a specialised authority in the field of asylum. However, it falls under the Ministry responsible also for Police, Immigration, Asylum, Local Government, Correctional Services and National Security. Precise information as to the average length of the asylum procedure is not available as this also largely depends on the number of arrivals at any given time. According to information obtained from the Refugee Commissioner, out of the 1366 applications that were concluded at first instance as of 31st December 2012, 34 were decided after 6 months for special and valid reasons.¹⁶ Information as to whether there are any cases for which a decision at appeal stage has not been taken more than one year after the registration of the claim is not available.

As a matter of practice, certain caseloads are prioritised by the Refugee Commissioner. The types of cases which are prioritised include cases involving particular vulnerable persons who, on a prima facie basis, are likely to be given protection, cases involving persons who are in closed centres over those who are in open centres and, in the case of mass influx, preference is given to those coming from countries whose nationals are, prima facie, more liable to be given protection.¹⁷ Since the majority of asylum-seekers in Malta are detained, the consequence of this prioritisation is a shorter time period in detention for the asylum-seeker whose application is prioritised. For instance, vulnerable asylum-seekers must have their vulnerability assessed in order to determine whether they should be released to open centres pending the examination of their asylum application. Unfortunately, this assessment often takes many months to conclude. Thus, having their cases prioritised by the Refugee Commissioner means that they could be released from detention with protection before they are recommended for release on vulnerability grounds. Nevertheless, negative consequences of this prioritisation arises with respect to those asylum-seekers who come from countries whose nationals are, prima facie, not considered to be in need of protection but who, on the basis of their individual claim, are, in fact, in need of such protection. As a result, such asylum-seekers have to spend an amount of time in detention which is longer than the amount of time they would actually have spent had their application been examined in order of registration. For asylum-seekers with a genuine need of protection and that are not kept in detention, the actual consequences of prioritisation for them relate mostly to the fact that they have considerably less rights than persons with some form of protection status. Thus, the ability to access certain basic services in Malta are effectively hindered pending a final decision on their asylum application.

¹⁴ Malta Today, Pushbacks suspended as European Court demands explanation from Malta, 9 July 2013. The Rule 39 was followed by a full application claiming violations of a number of Convention rights, and the case remains pending at the time of writing.

¹⁵ Procedural Regulations, Regulation 8.

Appeal

Indicators:

- Does the law provide for an appeal against the first instance decision in the regular procedure:
 - Yes No
 - o if yes, is the appeal judicial administrative
 - o If yes, is it suspensive Yes No
- Average processing time for the appeal body to make a decision: N/A

An appeal mechanism of the first instance decision is available before a board known as the Refugee Appeals Board. The Board consists of six separate chambers, each made up of three persons - a chairperson and an additional two members. It is an administrative review and involves the assessment of facts and points of law. An asylum-seeker has two weeks to appeal and these two weeks start to run from the day the asylum-seeker receives the written negative decision of the Refugee Commissioner.¹⁸ The Refugee Appeals Board does not accept late appeals. There is no time limit set in law for the said Board to take a decision. Nevertheless, the appeal has suspensive effect.

In practice, asylum-seekers can face obstacles in appealing a decision. First of all, the decision containing the reasons for the rejection of the application at first instance is always written in English, hindering an asylum-seeker, who does not understand English, from appealing the decision. Moreover, asylum-seekers in detention can face obstacles in appealing because there are no clear and established procedures in place for them to lodge an appeal. For instance, standard appeal forms are not always available to asylum-seekers in detention as such forms are mostly provided by NGOs who are not present in detention on a daily basis. Unfortunately, information as to the average time it takes for the appeal body to take a decision is not available.

Usually, the appeal takes the form of written submissions to the Refugee Appeals Board, however, the Board can, where appropriate, hold an oral hearing and it shall only hear new evidence which was previously unknown or which could not have been produced earlier when the case was first examined by the Refugee Commissioner.¹⁹ As a result, asylum-seekers can be heard in practice at the appeal stage but only in very limited and discretionary circumstances. Recent months have shown an increase in the number of oral hearings held by the Board and a significant increase in the proportion of first-instance decisions which have been overturned at appeal stage. Hearings of the Refugee Appeals Board are not public and its decisions are communicated only to the applicant concerned, their legal ¹⁸ Refugees Act, Article 7.

¹⁹ Refugee Appeals Board (Procedures) Regulations, 2001, Regulation 5 (1) (h).

representative, if known, the Refugee Commissioner, the Minister concerned and the High Commissioner (UNHCR).²⁰

An onward appeal is not provided in the law in case of a negative decision from the Refugee Appeals Board. However, judicial review of the decisions taken by the Board is possible and several cases to this effect have been filed in the past couple of years.²¹ Unfortunately, judicial review does not deal with the merits of the asylum claim but only with the manner in which the concerned administrative authority reached its decision. Moreover, such cases would not automatically have suspensive effect. Judicial review is a regular court procedure, assessing whether administrative decisions comply with required procedural rules such as legality, nature of considerations referred to and duty to give reasons. Applicants could be granted legal aid if eligible under the general rules for legal aid in court proceedings.

Personal Interview

Indicators:

- Is a personal interview of the asylum-seeker conducted in practice in most cases in the regular procedure? Yes No
 - o If so, are interpreters available in practice, for interviews? Yes No
- In the regular procedure, is the interview conducted by the authority responsible for taking the decision? Yes No
- Are interviews conducted through video conferencing? Frequently Rarely Never

National law does not provide for a systematic personal interview of asylum applicants, as there are cases in which the interview can be omitted.²² The grounds for omitting a personal interview are the same as those contained in the 2005 Procedures Directive.²³ In practice, however, all asylum-seekers are interviewed. The interviews are conducted by the Refugee Commissioner or by one of his representatives, which means that the interviews are conducted by the same authority that takes the decision on the application.

The presence of an interpreter during the personal interview is required according to national legislation.²⁴ Interpreters for Somalis and Eritreans, that constitute the main nationalities of asylum-seekers in Malta, are largely available. However, interpreters for other languages are not always readily available. Complaints as to the quality and conduct of the first instance interpreters are at times raised with legal representatives at the appeal stage, with the possibility of these being included in the appeal submissions. It is possible for interview procedures to be gender sensitive by appointing an interpreter and interviewer of the gender preferred by the applicant. However this is not automatic, and requests to this end have to be made either by the applicant themselves or by their legal assistant before the interview is carried out.

National legislation does not provide for audio/video recording of the personal interview. However, such legislation requires that a written report is made of every personal interview containing at least the essential information regarding the application.²⁵ In practice, interview notes are taken during the personal interview whilst the interviewer is asking the questions, as well as the responses provided by the interpreter (if any). However, there is no indication that the consent of the asylum-seeker is obtained for the audio recording of the interview and it appears, from several case files of applicants for asylum, that asylum-seekers are simply informed of the fact that the interview will be audio recorded. As a matter of standard practice, all interviews are recorded. It is uncertain whether an audio/video recording is admissible in the appeal procedure as there are no known cases wherein the Refugee Appeals Board made use of such recording material.

Interviews can and have been conducted through video conferencing. According to the Refugee Commissioner, interviews through video conferencing are considered to be essential in situations where there is a lack of interpreters available in order to proceed with the interview of an asylum-seeker. To date, three asylum interviews have been conducted through video conferencing and, it seems, these were carried for the purpose of interpretation.²⁶

The applicant is usually granted a copy of the Interview Notes of the interview with a first instance negative decision. However, this is not always the case, and the applicant would have to make a separate request to be granted such a copy in preparation for their appeal. Unfortunately, the applicant is only granted the opportunity to make corrections to the content of the application form and not to the content of the Interview Notes of the personal interview, as a copy of the former is granted to the applicant before the first instance decision is taken. In practice, the quality of the Interview Notes may not be fully ascertained since these are taken during the interview itself and based on the responses provided by the interpreter. The audio recording is hardly ever made available to applicants or their lawyers and, if so, only following a formally reasoned request to RefCom.

²⁶ Communication from Refugee Commissioner to Dr Neil Falzon of Aditus Foundation (2013).

National legislation states that at first instance an applicant is allowed to consult a legal adviser at their own expense. However, in the event of a negative decision at first instance, free legal aid shall be granted under the same conditions applicable to Maltese nationals.²⁷ In the case of Maltese nationals, legal aid is available for all kinds of cases. However, legal aid for civil cases is subject to a means test whilst legal aid for criminal cases is not.²⁸ According to the office responsible for the provision of free legal assistance within the relevant Ministry, such legal assistance is usually not subject to a means test for asylum-seekers. There may, however, be instances when an asylum-seeker is channelled through the normal legal aid system available for Maltese nationals. Such instances generally include when there is a lack of information regarding the means of an asylum-seeker.²⁹ In practice, the appeal forms the applicants fill in and submit to the Refugee Appeals Board contain a request for legal aid. Unless, an applicant is assisted by a lawyer working with an NGO, this request is forwarded to the office responsible for the provision of legal aid within the Ministry, which will distribute the cases amongst a pool of asylum legal aid lawyers. One appointment with the applicant is then scheduled. To date legal aid in Malta for asylum appeals has been financed through the State budget.³⁰

The only free legal assistance available to asylum-seekers at first instance is that provided by lawyers working with NGOs. These services are regularly provided by a small group of NGOs as part of their on-going services and are funded either through project-funding or through other funding sources. It is to be noted that funding limitations could result in the services being reduced due to prioritisation. Generally, such lawyers provide legal information and advice both before and after the first instance decision, including an explanation of the decision taken and, in some cases, interview preparation. They can also attend personal interviews whenever the asylum-seeker requests their presence. However, this is at the discretion of the Refugee Commissioner and their contribution throughout the interview is limited.³¹ The main obstacle with regard to access to this kind of assistance is that there are a limited number of NGO lawyers who are able to provide such a service in relation to the number of asylum-seekers requiring it. There are no known private lawyers providing free legal assistance to asylum-seekers at first instance. A reason for this could be the fact that most asylum-seekers are kept in detention, which prevents them from accessing the services of a private lawyer. In addition, the conditions and location of the detention centres may discourage private lawyers from providing legal assistance to asylum-seekers.

Legal assistance at the appeal stage is not restricted by any considerations, such as that the appeal is likely to be unsuccessful. There are, however, some restrictions in national legislation and in practice that can impinge on the ability of lawyers to effectively assist applicants for asylum at the appeal stage. Such restrictions relate to access to the applicants' files as well as the applicants themselves. For instance, in practice, lawyers that assist applicants for asylum at the appeal stage are not allowed to make photocopies of the relevant information contained in their clients' files in preparation for the appeal. Instead, they are required to manually copy the contents of the files at the Refugee Commissioner's office; thus, further discouraging more lawyers from assisting, or assisting effectively, asylum-seekers.

On the other hand, the law states that access to information in the applicants' files may be precluded when disclosure may jeopardise national security, the security of the entities providing the information, and the security of the person to whom the information relates.³² Moreover, access to the applicants by the legal advisors/lawyers can be subject to limitations necessary for the security, public order or administrative management of the area in which the applicants are kept.³³ In practice, however, these restrictions are rarely, if ever, implemented. Usually, the appeal takes the form of written submissions to the Board by a stipulated time. Thus, it is not a very complicated procedure in practice. Nevertheless, the assistance of lawyer is essential for an effective appeal.

According to a local legal aid lawyer, the amount paid to a legal aid lawyer for every appeal is not enough to cover the preparatory work (reading the interview notes and decision as well as manually copying the contents of the appellant's file at the Refugee Commissioner's office and preparing questions to ask the appellant), the meeting with the appellant and the writing of the submissions.³⁴ Meetings with appellants who are in detention can be particularly problematic for practical and logistical reasons that can be of detriment to both the appellants and the lawyers. For instance, at the entrance of the detention centres legal aid lawyers have to show their identity cards and be given a pass. Sometimes this is a cumbersome procedure because the lawyer's name could not be on the list of people authorised to enter the detention centre. Also, there is rarely an adequate place for the lawyer to discuss the case with their client in detention. According to the legal aid lawyer, they sometimes had to speak to their clients in corridors or sitting on crates. As a result, the financial remuneration does not compensate for the amount of work as well as the practical and logistical obstacles involved in effectively representing asylum-seekers at the appeal stage.³⁵

Procedure

Indicator:

- If another EU Member State accepts responsibility for the asylum applicant, how long does it take in practice (on average) before the applicant is transferred to the responsible Member State? If no appeal is filed, a couple of days. If an appeal is filed, over 6 months.

All those who apply for asylum are systematically fingerprinted and photographed by the Immigration authorities for insertion into the EURODAC database. Those who enter Malta irregularly, usually by boat, are immediately taken into the custody of the Immigration authorities and are subsequently fingerprinted and photographed. Asylum-seekers who are either residing regularly in Malta or who apply for international protection prior to being apprehended by the Immigration authorities, are also sent to the Immigration authorities to be fingerprinted and photographed immediately after their desire to apply for asylum is registered.

In registering their desire to apply for international protection, asylum-seekers are first asked to fill in a 'Dublin II questionnaire' wherein they are asked to specify if they have family members residing within the EU. Should this be the case, the information is passed on to the Immigration Police Office responsible for Dublin transfers and the examination of their application for protection is suspended until further notice. It is up to the Immigration Police to then contact the asylum-seeker to ask for further information regarding the possibility of an inter-state transfer, such as the possibility of providing documentation proving familial links.

There is no specific legislative instrument that transposes the provisions of the Dublin Regulation into national legislation. The procedure relating to the transfers of asylum-seekers in terms of the Regulation is an administrative procedure, with reference to the text of the Regulation itself. The Refugee Commissioner is the designated head of the Dublin Unit with the Immigration Police implementing the procedure in practice.

Information is usually provided to the lawyer representing the applicant upon request. Where an applicant is detained, it is inherently more difficult for the individual to follow up on the Dublin case with information being obtained solely through the lawyer.

There is no information available on the use of the humanitarian or the sovereignty clauses, although the Refugee Commissioner has indicated that there are cases where the humanitarian clause is used and Malta takes charge of the applicant on account of health reasons.

In practice, few asylum-seekers are eligible for transfer to another Member State and no official statistics are available regarding the length of time it takes for a transfer to be effected after another Member State would have accepted responsibility. Recent examples however illustrate that the transfer is sought to be effected within a couple of weeks of the date of acceptance by the responsible Member State as the Immigration authorities buy the flight ticket within days of the decision communicated to them. If the asylum-seeker was detained prior to lodging the asylum application, detention continues until there is a final answer regarding which state will assume responsibility. In the case that another EU state accepts responsibility for the applicant, the asylum-seeker remains in detention until the transfer takes place. If Malta assumes responsibility for the application, the status determination procedure continues from after the Preliminary Questionnaire stage. Moreover, if the asylum-seeker consents to the transfer, this is carried out without the need for police escorts. The transfer is only carried out under escort if the asylum-seeker demonstrates an unwillingness to be transferred.³⁷

The main impact of the transfer on the asylum procedure relates to the difficulties in accessing the procedure upon return. If an asylum-seeker leaves Malta without permission of the Immigration authorities, either by escaping from detention or by leaving the country irregularly, the Refugee Commissioner will consider the application for asylum to have been implicitly withdrawn, in pursuance of Regulation 13 of the Procedural Regulations, transposing the provisions of the Asylum Procedures Directive. Consequently, an asylum-seeker who is transferred back will in almost all cases find that his asylum application has been implicitly withdrawn leaving him susceptible to return by the Immigration authorities.

Furthermore, persons travelling from Malta in an irregular manner run the risk of facing criminal charges upon being returned, on the basis of the Immigration Act. Upon return, the person would probably be arrested and brought before the Court of Magistrates (Criminal Jurisdiction) to face charges. During this time, pending the case, the asylum-seeker would be remanded in custody at Corradino Correctional Facility for the entire duration of the criminal proceedings, which generally last for about one to two months from the date of institution of proceedings. The asylum-seeker will be entitled to request the appointment of a legal aid lawyer, or to avail himself of a private lawyer should he have access to one. If found guilty, the Court may sentence the asylum seeker to either a fine of not more than around €12,000 or a maximum imprisonment term of two years, or for both the fine and imprisonment. It is noted that decisions are largely unpredictable, as some individuals have also been sentenced to imprisonment yet suspended for a number of years.

The applicants may ask for a reopening of their case, considered as a subsequent application, if they provide reasons considered justifiable by the Refugee Commissioner. In the interim they may however be removed to their countries of origin. The time taken by the Refugee Commissioner to decide on whether to readmit the individual into the asylum procedure is entirely discretionary, with the decision to accept to examine an individual's application at times taking several months. A number of individuals in this situation waited for months in detention pending an answer on their request. It is clear that during these months their legal status rendered them vulnerable to removal. Moreover, as these individuals are in most cases detained, communication with the Refugee Commissioner is even more limited and primarily facilitated through the provision of services of NGOs regularly present in detention centres.³⁸

Indicators:

- Does the law provide for an appeal against the decision in the Dublin procedure:
 - Yes No
 - o if yes, is the appeal judicial administrative
 - o If yes, is it suspensive Yes No
- Average processing time for the appeal body to make a decision: N/A

Appeals from the decisions taken under the Dublin Regulation are possible through the filing of an appeal to the Immigration Appeals Board. The promulgation of subsidiary legislation in 2012 widened the Board's jurisdiction to deal with appeals from decisions taken within the Dublin II framework.³⁹ The provisions of the Immigration Act indicate that the appeal must be filed within three working days from when the individual is notified with the decision.⁴⁰ Immigration legislation regulating procedures before the Immigration Appeals Board does not specify whether such appeals have suspensive effect or otherwise, yet may be interpreted as implying such a suspensive effect if requested, even verbally, by the appellant.

Personal Interview

Indicators:

- Is a personal interview of the asylum-seeker conducted in most cases in practice in the Dublin procedure? Yes No
- If so, are interpreters available in practice, for interviews? Yes No

There is no requirement for an interview with the asylum-seeker who is within the Dublin procedure. Notwithstanding, upon notification that an asylum-seeker might be eligible for a Dublin transfer he will be called by the immigration police operating the Dublin Unit to verify the information previously given to the Refugee Commissioner or to the legal representative and will be advised to provide supporting documentation to substantiate the request for transfer. These interviews take place at the Police General Headquarters wherein the asylum-seekers are escorted from the detention centre to be questioned by the police. Although the Immigration Police stated that interpreters are provided at the interview stage, legal practitioners who have assisted a number of asylum-seekers within the Dublin procedure stated that no cultural mediators⁴¹ are available at this point although at times an English-speaking detainee might provide interpreting services. Moreover, the interview is not recorded nor is a transcript available.

Legal assistance

Indicators:

- Do asylum-seekers have access to free legal assistance at the first instance in the Dublin procedure in practice? Yes not always/with difficulty No
- Do asylum-seekers have access to free legal assistance in the appeal procedure against a Dublin decision? Yes always/with difficulty No

No provision is made for the availability of free legal assistance. Instead, if the asylum-seeker is in detention, legal assistance is provided by an NGO that is regularly present in detention and offers professional legal services. If the asylum-seeker is not detained they can seek the services of a lawyer at their own expense or through the services offered by NGOs. In practice, the only way in which an asylum-seeker pending a Dublin transfer can obtain consistent information about the stage of the proceedings is through the assistance of a lawyer who is able to follow up with the competent authorities.

Suspension of transfers

Indicator:

- Are Dublin transfers systematically suspended as a matter of policy or as a matter of jurisprudence to one or more countries? Yes No
 - o If yes, to which country/countries? Greece

Following the M.S.S. European Court of Human Right's judgment, Malta suspended the transfers of asylum-seekers to Greece although the police will still assist with the transfer should an asylum-seeker voluntarily ask to be returned to Greece. When transfers are suspended, Maltese authorities then assume responsibility for the examination of the application and the asylum-seeker is treated in the same way as any other asylum-seeker who would have lodged the asylum application in Malta. Apart from these situations, Malta has not suspended transfers as a result of evaluation of systematic deficiencies in any EU MS.

⁴¹ Different to interpreters, as cultural mediators play a more active role in ensuring culturally appropriate language and communication.

Asylum Procedures Directive⁴², Malta's Article 24 adds further grounds, according to which an asylum application may be deemed inadmissible:

- “[another Member State] is obliged to examine the particular application for asylum in terms of Council Regulation (EC) 343/03 of 18 February 2003 establishing the criteria and mechanisms for determining the Member State responsible for examining an asylum application lodged in one of the Member States by a third country national”;
- “recognized in a country which is not a member state as a refugee and can still avail himself of that protection or otherwise enjoys sufficient protection in that country, including benefiting from the principle of non-refoulement, and such person can be re-admitted to that country”;
- an application from a national of a safe country of origin as listed in the Schedule⁴³ is also inadmissible.

As the law mentions the inadmissibility of an application for recognition of refugee status, only the Refugee Commissioner can decide upon the admissibility of the application⁴⁴. According to the Office of the Refugee Commissioner, all asylum applications are processed under the regular asylum procedure with no applications actually processed through the accelerated procedure.

Appeal

All recommendations under the accelerated procedure shall immediately be referred to the Chairman of the Board who shall examine and review the recommendation of the Commissioner within three working days.⁴⁵ In practice, the three day time limit hinders any legal assistance, particularly in a detention context. No appeal is allowed.

⁴² The Asylum Procedures Directive lists the following as potentially inadmissible applications: another Member State has granted refugee status; a third country is considered the first country of asylum; a third country is considered a safe third country; the applicant is granted, or in the process of being granted, an alternative form of protection with equivalent rights and benefits to refugee status, including protection from refoulement; the applicant lodges an application identical to a finalised decision in his regard; and specific applications made by dependants of applicants.

According to Regulation 5(5) of the Procedural Regulations, the interview may be omitted if the application is unfounded. However, the Office of the Refugee Commissioner systematically interviews all asylum-seekers. The same regular procedures therefore apply for inadmissible applications.⁴⁶

Indicators:

- Do asylum-seekers have access to free legal assistance at first instance in the admissibility procedure in practice? Yes not always/with difficulty No
- Do asylum-seekers have access to free legal assistance in the appeal procedure against an admissibility decision? Yes not always/with difficulty No

Article 23(6) of the Refugees Act stipulates the right to be assisted by a legal adviser but it does not provide for free legal aid service. It does not differ in any way to the normal procedure.

5. Border procedure (border and transit zones)

- Are there any reports (NGO reports, media, testimonies, etc) of people refused entry at the border and returned without examination of their protection needs? Yes No
- Can an application made at the border be examined in substance during a border procedure?
 Yes No

There is no specific border procedure in national legislation. The specificity of migration in Malta coupled with the fact that Malta is an island implies a strong “access” component. The right to seek asylum is not taken into account during maritime rescue operations, dealt with by the Armed Forces of ⁴⁶ Article 5(5) of S.L. 420.07.

Malta (AFM) who decide upon disembarkation of migrants and asylum-seekers in accordance with Malta's interpretation of its international maritime law obligations.

If the request to seek asylum is made at a point of entry such as an airport or maritime port, the immigration authorities will first decide on the applicant's immigration status and then inform the Office of the Refugee Commissioner of the application. As a rule, asylum seekers who present an application at the seaport or airport would be considered "inadmissible passengers" and detained on the basis of article 10 of the Immigration Act.

On 9 July 2013, Malta threatened to return to Libya a group of asylum-seekers, before granting them access to the asylum procedure. The return was stopped when a group of NGOs filed a Rule 39 application before the European Court of Human Rights, eventually resulting in a cancellation of the planned return operation. All the asylum-seekers were subsequently granted access to the asylum procedure⁴⁷.

Within the above context where it is noted that border procedures are not too relevant for Malta, access to the territory is at times problematic for asylum-seekers attempting to reach Malta by boat, having departed from Libya. Whilst the vast majority of persons are rescued at sea through search and rescue operations coordinated by the Maltese Armed Forces, there have been a number of incidents where rescued persons were not granted access to Malta's territory. These incidents generally revolve around the complex scenario created by the interplay of maritime, refugee, human rights and humanitarian law, whereby Malta either believes Libya to be a safe port of disembarkation for rescued asylum-seekers – contrary to opinions expressed by UNHCR, the European Union Commission and civil society organisations – or Italy and Malta engage in heated talks about whether the rescued asylum-seekers ought to be disembarked in Italy or in Malta. In all incidents, as for example those involving the Salamis (2013)⁴⁸ and the Francisco y Catalina (2006)⁴⁹, discussions focusing on Malta and Italy's interpretations of their search and rescue obligations, additionally aggravated by the divergent approaches of the two States. Civil society organisations often reiterate concern about such practices, urging respect for human life and encouraging private vessels to honour their international obligation of rescuing persons in distress⁵⁰.

6. Accelerated procedures

General (scope, grounds for accelerated procedures, time limits)

Article 23 of the Refugees Act provides that applications should be examined under accelerated procedures if they are manifestly unfounded, if the applicant could have found or could have found safe protection elsewhere under the Geneva Convention or the asylum Directives, or if the applicant holds a travel document from a safe third country. An application is considered to be manifestly unfounded when it is:

- not related to refugee grounds as defined in the Convention;
- or which is totally lacking in substance and the applicant provides no indications that he would be exposed to fear of persecution in his own country or his story contains no circumstantial or personal details;
- or in relation to which the applicant gives clearly insufficient details or evidence to substantiate his claim and his story is inconsistent, contradictory or fundamentally improbable;
- or in relation to which the applicant bases his application on a false identity or on forged or counterfeit documents that he maintains as genuine when questioned about them;
- or in relation to which the applicant deliberately made false representations of a substantial nature;
- or in relation to which the applicant, without reasonable cause and in bad faith, destroyed, damaged or disposed of any passport, other document or ticket relevant to his claim, either in order to establish a false identity for the purpose of his application or to make the consideration of his application by the authorities more difficult;
- or in relation to which the applicant deliberately failed to reveal that he had previously lodged an application for asylum in another country;
- or in relation to which the applicant, having had ample earlier opportunity to submit an asylum application, submitted the application in order to forestall an impending removal order from Malta, and did not provide a valid explanation for not having applied earlier;
- or in relation to which the applicant has flagrantly failed to comply with the substantive obligations imposed by Malta's legal provisions relating to asylum procedures;
- or prior to which the applicant had made an application for recognition as a refugee in a country party to the Convention, and the Commissioner is satisfied that his application was properly considered and rejected in that country and the applicant has failed to show a material change of these circumstances;
- or when the applicant for asylum comes from a safe country of origin.⁵¹

Article 23 (2) provides that if the Refugee Commissioner is of the opinion that an application is manifestly unfounded, he shall examine the application within three working days and his recommendation shall immediately be referred to the Refugee Appeals Board, who then also examine within three working days. In practice the Office of the Refugee Commissioner does not consider prima facie applications and examines all applications under the normal procedure.

According to information by the Office of the Refugee Commissioner, the Office has prioritised the examination of applications lodged by particular vulnerable persons who prima facie show that these are likely to be given protection. It also prioritised those who are in the closed centres over those who are in the open ones, and in the case of mass influx or sudden considerable numbers it also gave preference to those coming from countries which prima facie are more liable to be given protection.

⁵¹ The Refugees Act lists these countries as: Australia, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, Croatia, Costa Rica, Gabon, Ghana, Iceland, India, Jamaica, Japan, Liechtenstein, New Zealand, Norway, Senegal, Switzerland, United States of America, Uruguay, Member States of the European Union and European Economic Area.

According to the Office of the Refugee Commissioner, in 2013 no applications were processed under the accelerated procedure.

Appeal

Indicators:

- Does the law provide for an appeal against a decision taken in an accelerated procedure?
 Yes No

Article 23 (2) provides that if the Refugee Commissioner is of the opinion that an application is manifestly unfounded, he shall examine the application within three working days and refer his recommendations immediately to the Refugee Appeals board, which in turn is provided as well three working days to examine the application. No further appeal is allowed, yet under Regulation 17(1) of the Procedural Regulations the applicant is able to appeal against a decision of inadmissibility on the basis of the safe third country if they are able to show that return would subject them to torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

As with the regular procedure, access to legal assistance is difficult primarily since the detention of asylum-seekers renders problematic all contact and communication with lawyers. Free legal assistance is not provided in the accelerated procedure, resulting in asylum-seekers depending on severely limited NGO-provided legal aid.

Personal Interview

Indicators:

- Is a personal interview of the asylum-seeker conducted in most cases in practice in an accelerated procedure? Yes No
 - o If yes, is the personal interview limited to questions relating to nationality, identity and travel route? Yes No
 - o If so, are interpreters available in practice, for interviews? Yes No
- Are personal interviews conducted through video conferencing?
 Frequently Rarely Never

The Office of the Refugee Commissioner does not consider prima facie manifestly unfounded application and therefore examined all applications under the normal procedure.

Legal assistance

Indicators:

- Do asylum-seekers have access to free legal assistance at first instance in accelerated procedures in practice? Yes not always/with difficulty No
- Do asylum-seekers have access to free legal assistance in the appeal procedure against a decision taken under an accelerated procedure? Yes not always/with difficulty
- No

As per the regular procedure, free legal assistance is only provided at the appeal stage. The modalities and obstacles referred to for the regular procedure are also applicable under the accelerated procedure, possibly exacerbated by the extremely short operational time frame and limitation on appeal possibilities.

C. Information for asylum-seekers and access to NGOs and UNHCR

Indicators:

- Is sufficient information provided to asylum-seekers on the procedures in practice? Yes not always/with difficulty No
- Is sufficient information provided to asylum-seekers on their rights and obligations in practice? Yes not always/with difficulty No
- Do asylum-seekers located at the border have effective access to NGOs and UNHCR if they wish so in practice? Yes not always/with difficulty No
- Do asylum-seekers in detention centres have effective access to NGOs and UNHCR if they wish so in practice? Yes not always/with difficulty No
- Do asylum-seekers accommodated in remote locations on the territory (excluding borders) have effective access to NGOs and UNHCR if they wish so in practice? Yes not always/with difficulty No N/A

The provisions in the law regarding information to asylum-seekers are Regulation 3 (3) of the Declaration Regulations and Regulation 4 (2) of the Procedural Regulations.⁵² The latter states that asylum-seekers have to be informed, in a language that they may reasonably be supposed to understand, of, among other things, the procedure to be followed and their rights and obligations during the procedure. It also states that asylum-seekers have to be informed of the result of the decision, in a language that they may reasonably be supposed to understand, when they are not assisted or represented by a legal adviser and when free legal assistance is not available. This provision does not, however, state in which form such information has to be provided except for the decision that, by virtue of Regulation 9 of the same Regulations, has to be provided in a written format. In practice, information is provided both by the Immigration Police and personnel working for the Refugee Commissioner. In the case of the Immigration Police, information on the rights and obligations of asylum-seekers is provided almost immediately in the form of a booklet that is available in English, French and Arabic. On the other hand, the information provided by the personnel working in the Refugee Commissioner's office is communicated within one or two working days of the arrival of the asylum-seeker to Malta. These officials visit the closed centres and deliver information about the asylum procedure in Malta.

The information is delivered using different means and includes an explanation of the purpose of the session by the personnel (with the help of an interpreter), an audio-visual presentation available in the most common eleven languages of the asylum population (i.e. Amharic, Tigrinya, Arabic, English, Djoula, French, Hawsa, Oromo, Russian, Somali and Swahili, with further languages to be added, according to the exigencies of the applicants)⁵³ and a booklet that contains a transcript of the audio-visual presentation, also available in the said eleven different languages. The same type of information session is provided to asylum-seekers who are not in detention but who apply directly at the Refugee Commissioner's office. Alternative sources of information are available in practice mostly through NGOs. For instance, staff of the Jesuit Refugee Service Malta ('JRS Malta') visits detention centres after each boat arrival to provide an information session on the asylum procedures as well as on the rights and obligations pertaining to such procedures. When available, booklets containing such information, in English, French, Tigrinya and Somali, are provided to asylum-seekers by JRS Malta. JRS Malta is also available to provide information sessions to asylum-seekers who are not kept in detention. However, such is only possible if the asylum-seekers concerned come to the attention of the said organisation.

⁵² Asylum Procedures (Application for a Declaration) Regulations, 2001 and Procedural Regulations.

⁵³ Communication from the Refugee Commissioner to Dr Neil Falzon of aditus foundation (2013).

Asylum-seekers who arrive in Malta in an irregular manner are not effectively informed of the possibility and of the means of challenging their detention decision and the removal order issued against them. Information on how to challenge the latter consists of two sentences written in English on the removal order, which states that they have three days in which to challenge the said order. The information provided by JRS Malta during their information sessions covers the possibility of challenging detention decisions and removal orders. However, it is not always possible to communicate this information within the time limit provided to appeal a removal order. Moreover, NGOs lack sufficient resources to provide this information to all persons and the over crowdedness and lack of appropriate space in detention is not favourable to the dissemination of information.

In addition, personnel from the office of the Refugee Commissioner conduct only one information session per group of arrivals and, usually, such is conducted before asylum-seekers register their desire to apply for asylum. There is a lack of a constant flow of information from the authorities throughout the various stages of the procedure, with no information desk or similar initiative at the Refugee Commissioner's office. Throughout the different stages of the asylum procedure, asylum-seekers can only obtain further information from NGOs that visit detention centres on a regular basis. With respect to the Dublin Regulation, the only information provided to asylum-seekers is contained in a document that is given to each person by the Immigration authorities upon their arrival. The information is contained in a few short paragraphs and is written in English. It does not include information on the consequences of continuing to travel to another EU Member State or absconding from a transfer. As a result of all this, the information provided cannot be considered to be sufficient for asylum-seekers to fully understand the way in which the Dublin system functions as well as its consequences. According to legal practitioners operating in the field, it appears that Dublin-related information leaflets for adults and unaccompanied children as included in Annexes X and XI of the Commission Implementing Regulation No 118/2014 are not distributed to asylum-seekers.⁵⁴

National legislation provides that UNHCR shall have access to asylum applicants, including those in detention and in airport or port transit zones.⁵⁵ Moreover, the law also states that a person seeking asylum in Malta shall be informed of his right to contact UNHCR.⁵⁶ There is no provision in the law with respect to access to asylum applicants by NGOs, however, it states that legal advisers who assist applicants for asylum shall have access to closed areas such as detention facilities and transit zones for the purpose of consulting the applicant.⁵⁷ Thus, NGOs have indirect access to asylum applicants through lawyers who work for them. In practice, however, asylum-seekers located at the border or in closed centres do not face major obstacles in accessing NGOs and UNHCR.

In October 2013, following an incident at sea that saw hundreds of lives lost and groups of Syrian asylum-seekers brought to Italy and Malta, the vast majority of rescued persons were not detained as according to the regular procedure but were immediately accommodated in an open centre. With regard to access to information, it was noted that Malta's information provision system depends on whether the asylum-seeker is detained or not, i.e. while detained asylum-seekers do in fact regularly receive prompt and intelligible information on the asylum procedure, asylum-seekers not in detention encounter obstacles in accessing even the most basic information. Immediate provision of information on the asylum procedure, the Dublin procedure, or rights and obligations, was conducted by NGOs, with the regular information sessions being organised only weeks following the rescue operation. By this time, many asylum-seekers had left the centre or Malta, possibly without having accessed the asylum procedure or being made aware of Dublin procedures, including the right to family reunification.

D. Subsequent applications

Indicators:

- Does the legislation provide for a specific procedure for subsequent applications? Yes No
- Is a removal order suspended during the examination of a first subsequent application?
 - o At first instance Yes No
 - o At the appeal stage Yes No
- Is a removal order suspended during the examination of a second, third, subsequent application?
 - o At first instance Yes No
 - o At the appeal stage Yes No

An asylum-seeker whose claim has been rejected may submit a subsequent application to the Refugee Commissioner.⁵⁸ A person may apply for a subsequent application, if they can provide elements or findings that were not presented before – subject to strict interpretation – at first instance. This evidence would have to be proof of which the applicant was either not aware of, or, which could not have been submitted before. Such new elements need to be presented within fifteen days of receiving the information. Very often the assessment of the application is based on written submissions, but an interview is also possible in some cases, at the discretion of the Refugee Commissioner. Once the new elements are evaluated, a decision on the case is communicated to the appellant in writing. Seeing that, at this stage of the proceedings there is no free legal aid asylum-seekers are almost entirely dependent on NGOs.

Removal orders are only suspended once the applicant has formally been confirmed to be an asylum-seeker by the Refugee Commissioner, since this confirmation triggers the general protection from non-refoulement guaranteed to all asylum-seekers.

In the eventuality that a subsequent application is not accepted, there is the possibility of appealing⁵⁹ this decision to the Refugee Appeals Board⁶⁰ (RAB), in the same way as with the regular procedure. The time limit within which to appeal is fifteen days.

In case the subsequent application is rejected, the applicant is informed of the possibility to appeal⁶¹ to the RAB, once again within fifteen days. There is no limit as to the number of subsequent applications lodged, as long as new evidence is presented every time.

There are two main obstacles faced by asylum-seekers. The first is lack of information. Information on the possibility to lodge a subsequent application is never communicated to asylum-seekers whose appeal at the RAB has been rejected. The other obstacle is the lack of free legal assistance when submitting a subsequent application. The only alternative for asylum-seekers is to approach the Jesuit Refugee Service, (JRS) which is the main NGO offering a free legal service in the field of asylum. Second, third and other subsequent applications are generally treated in the same manner.

E. Guarantees for vulnerable groups of asylum-seekers (children, traumatised persons, survivors of torture)

1. Special Procedural guarantees

Indicators:

- Is there a specific identification mechanism in place to systematically identify vulnerable asylum-seekers? Yes No Yes, but only for some categories
- Are there special procedural arrangements/guarantees for vulnerable people? Yes No Yes, but only for some categories

Asylum-seekers who are deemed to be in a particularly vulnerable situation are assessed with a view to their release from detention, following referral to the Agency for the Welfare of Asylum-seekers (AWAS).

The Vulnerable Adults Assessment Procedure (VAAP) is administered by AWAS; the organisation accepts referrals for assessment from any and all of the entities that come in contact with migrants throughout their time in detention, including the Detention Service, medical staff in detention, UNHCR, NGO staff, etc. Referrals could be made on various grounds, including: serious chronic illness; psychological problems, trauma or of some other cause; mental illness; physical disability; and age (where the individual concerned is over 60), and are usually accompanied by medical certificates or other supporting documents.

Assessment is conducted by a member of AWAS staff; where the individual is deemed to be vulnerable a request for release in terms of government policy is made to the Principal Immigration Officer (Commissioner of Police). As a rule the Principal Immigration Officer accepts such requests and grants release wherever AWAS deems it necessary.

Like the Age Assessment Procedure, the VAAP is not regulated by clear publicly available rules. Where a referral is rejected the individual concerned is not always informed of the decision; where the decision is communicated it is rarely communicated in writing and no reasons are ever given to the individual concerned. Where the case is being followed by a social worker, it is usually possible for the said professional to request and obtain information regarding the reasons for rejection on the client's behalf. The VAAP allows for the possibility of review of a decision not to recommend release at any point during an individual's detention, usually upon presentation of new evidence.

The length of time taken to conclude assessment procedures varies; as a rule cases concerning referrals on grounds of mental health or chronic illness are likely to take longer to determine than cases where vulnerability is immediately obvious, e.g. in the case of physical disability.

Between July 2011 and June 2012, according to JRS records, out of a total of 39 adults released on grounds of vulnerability (mostly mental health problems or serious chronic illness) 1 was released within 2 weeks of referral; 6 within 1 month; 13 within 2 months; 6 within 3 months; 7 within 4 months; 2 within 5 months; 1 within 7 months and 3 within 8 months (JRS Malta, 2012). This effectively means that one-third spent over 3 months in detention awaiting the outcome of vulnerability assessment procedures.

While awaiting the outcome of the assessment procedure vulnerable adults are held in detention, where staff is exclusively made up of security personnel, so their access to any form of psychosocial support is extremely limited. Moreover, those requiring in-patient psychiatric care are accommodated in a closed ward where, according to the 2008 CPT report on their visit to Malta, conditions are extremely harsh.⁶²

Although an asylum-seeker will be released from detention if they are found to qualify as being in a particularly vulnerable situation, in practice this will not have a bearing on the asylum procedure, unless a specific request is made to the Refugee Commissioner. This means that identification and assessment are not directly or automatically relevant for the asylum procedure, but are directed towards reception-related considerations and decisions.

Requests for adjustments to the procedure in order to cater for the needs of vulnerable individuals are made on an ad hoc basis. However, as these safeguards are not set out in the law, approval or otherwise is entirely discretionary with the Refugee Commissioner being in a position to dictate the way in which the interview and assessment of the claim is carried out. Notwithstanding, in practice, when such requests have been made they are usually acceded to. However, this necessarily depends on the asylum-seeker being assisted by a legal representative, which is very often not the case in first-instance proceedings.

The Office of the Refugee Commissioner provided information that in the case that an asylum-seeker has been identified as being in need of special procedural guarantees, a trained caseworker is assigned to do the interview, during which the caseworker remains sensitive to the fact that the person might be unable to fully disclose details of the asylum claim. Nonetheless, practitioners who have attended several interviews over the last few years indicate that this may not always be taken into consideration as the asylum-seeker will still be expected to provide a considerable amount of detail that they might not always be able to provide on account of the trauma they would have experienced. In the absence of a procedure geared towards identifying victims of trauma and torture, and the emphasis on concluding cases in the shortest time possible, these asylum-seekers may be at a disadvantage as they could be unable to comprehensively disclose their protection needs.

Within the context of accelerated procedures, the law makes no special provision with regard to victims of torture, rape or other serious forms of psychological, physical or sexual violence or with regard to unaccompanied children. This means that all procedures, including accelerated procedures, may be applied to these categories of persons .

2. Use of medical reports

Indicators:

- Does the legislation provide for the possibility of a medical report in support of the applicant's statements regarding past persecution or serious harm?
 Yes Yes, but not in all cases No
- Are medical reports taken into account when assessing the credibility of the applicant's statements? Yes No

The law does not mention the presentation of medical reports in support of an asylum-seeker's claim. When these are presented, the Office of the Refugee Commissioner treats them as documentary evidence presented by the applicant. Practitioners who have assisted a number of asylum-seekers at first-instance note that medical reports are taken into consideration, especially with regard to applicants with mental health problems where reports provided by medical professionals are given considerable weight in the evaluation of the applicant's need for protection. Medical reports documenting torture and other violence are not routinely provided by asylum applicants.

The Office of the Refugee Commissioner notes that it has very rarely requested an applicant to undergo a medical examination and in these cases the examination is paid for from public funds.⁶³

3. Age assessment and legal representation of unaccompanied children

Indicators:

- Does the law provide for an identification mechanism for unaccompanied children?
 Yes No
- Does the law provide for the appointment of a representative to all unaccompanied children?
 Yes No

Unaccompanied asylum-seekers who declare that they are below the age of eighteen upon arrival or during the filling in of the Preliminary Questionnaire are referred to the Agency for the Welfare of Asylum-seekers (AWAS) for age assessment.

The Age Assessment Procedure was developed and implemented with a view to assessing claims of children. Although there are some references to this procedure in legal and in policy documents, the procedure itself is not regulated by law.

The only reference to age assessment procedures in law is found in Regulation 15(2) of the Procedural Regulations, which deal with the use of medical procedures to determine age, within the context of an application for asylum.

With specific reference to unaccompanied children and age assessment, the policy document referred to above states that, in order to avoid abuse by individuals who make false claims about their age to benefit from the protection provided to children the "Ministry for Justice and Home Affairs in consultation with the Ministry for the Family and Social Solidarity shall, in those cases where there is good reason to suspect the veracity of the minority age claimed by the immigrant, require the individual concerned to undertake an age verification test as soon as possible after arrival"⁶⁴.

In practice, from the information available, it appears that the Age Assessment Procedure consists of a number of different phases. Individuals are referred to AWAS by the Immigration Police (where they declare to be children on arrival), by the Refugee Commissioner or by other entities working in detention, e.g. Detention Service staff, UNHCR, NGOs, etc. (where they declare to be children in their Preliminary Questionnaire).

Following referral, an initial interview is conducted by one member of AWAS staff. Where this interview is inconclusive, a second interview is conducted by a panel of 3 persons known as the Age Assessment Team (AAT). Where the panel is convinced that the individual concerned is not a child, the minority age claim is rejected. Where a doubt remains, they are referred for a Further Age Verification (FAV) test (the benefit of the doubt is applied), which essentially consists of a wrist X-ray. Although the AAT is not bound by the results of the test, in practice, it would appear that in most cases where it is resorted to the result determines the outcome of the assessment.

⁶³ Information obtained via email from Refugee Commissioner.

⁶⁴ MJHA and MFSS, January 2005, at p. 13.

If the individual is found to be a child, a Care Order is issued,⁶⁵ the individual is released from detention and placed in an appropriate non-custodial residential facility, and a legal guardian is appointed to represent the minor. Once a guardian is appointed the asylum interview is carried out, and during the said interview the child is assisted by a legal guardian.

The Age Assessment Procedure has often been criticised, as it is plagued by delays and by a lack of adequate procedural guarantees, including lack of information about the procedure and the possibility of appeal. No reasons are ever given for decisions and there is no real possibility to challenge the decision taken by the AAT. In addition, migrants undergoing Age Assessment Procedures are detained throughout the procedures, usually in centres with adults without any special consideration for the fact that they are children.⁶⁶ It should be stated however that Article 15 of the Reception Regulations concedes that “an unaccompanied minor aged sixteen years or over may be placed in accommodation centres for adult asylum-seekers”.

The assigned legal guardian is an AWAS staff member, usually a social worker although there is no requirement on guardians’ general qualifications set out in law. The Procedural Regulations set out that the legal guardian shall inform the unaccompanied child about the meaning and consequences of the personal interview and prepare the child for the interview. Moreover, the representative attends the status determination interview and may ask questions during the procedure. In practice, although the legal guardian does attend the interview together with the child, information and advice regarding the asylum procedure is provided by NGOs upon referral by the children’s guardians.

The above procedure is not enshrined in any law, and no formalities or timelines exist to ensure compliance. Legal guardians are generally the social workers engaged by AWAS, who are, therefore, not independent from public authorities and in most cases responsible for a large number of children, due to resource constraints.

F. The safe country concepts (if applicable)

Indicators:

- Does national legislation allow for the use of safe country of origin concept in the asylum procedure? Yes No
- Does national legislation allow for the use of safe third country concept in the asylum procedure? Yes No
- Does national legislation allow for the use of first country of asylum concept in the asylum procedure? Yes No
- Is there a list of safe countries of origin? Yes No
- Is the safe country of origin concept used in practice? Yes No
- Is the safe third country concept used in practice? Yes No

The Refugees Act defines the notions of safe country of origin and safe third country. According to the Act, a safe country of origin means a country of which the applicant is a national or being a stateless person, was formerly habitually resident in that country and he has not submitted any serious grounds for considering the country not to be a safe country of origin in his particular circumstances. A safe third country means a country of which the applicant is not a national or citizen and where:

⁶⁵ In terms of the Children and Young Persons (Care Orders) Act, Chapter 285 of the Laws of Malta.

⁶⁶ Boat ride to Detention: Adult and Child Migrants in Malta, HRW, 2012, p. 38 et seq.

- life and liberty are not threatened on account of race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion;
- the principle of non-refoulement in accordance with the Convention is respected;
- the prohibition of removal, in violation of the right to freedom from torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment as laid down in international law, is respected;
- the possibility exists to request refugee status and, if found to be a refugee, to receive protection in accordance with the Convention;
- the applicant had resided in the safe country of origin for a meaningful period of time prior to his entry into Malta.

The Refugees Act also provides by way of a Schedule the list of countries of origin considered as safe. The Minister responsible for Home Affairs is competent to amend the list of countries and may review the list whenever necessary by means of an administrative act. The last amendment to the list is dated 2008. Currently the list of safe country of origin includes: Australia, Iceland, Benin, India, Botswana, Jamaica, Brazil, Japan, Canada, Liechtenstein, Cape Verde, New Zealand, Chile, Norway, Croatia, Senegal, Costa Rica, Switzerland, Gabon, United States of America, Ghana, Uruguay, Member States of the European Union and European Economic Area. The basis on which countries are listed/removed is unclear.

Under the Refugees Act, the concept of safe third country can be used to determine if an application should be considered under the accelerated procedure as manifestly unfounded or considered inadmissible. The concept of safe country of origin can be used to consider an application manifestly unfounded and therefore would make it fall under the accelerated procedure. In 2012, 6 cases (one from Benin, one from Senegal and 4 from India) were considered inadmissible after examination by the Office of the Refugee Commissioner.

In practice, it is noted that the above-mentioned 6 cases relied on the safe country of origin concept, however, data is lacking as to its application. Also, observed practice does not seem to follow clear guidelines and seems to be erratic. Detailed information on practice, and on emerging trends is quite difficult to obtain, rendering any assessment problematic.

G. Treatment of specific nationalities

The Office of the Refugee Commissioner gives preference to those coming from countries that prima facie are more liable to be given protection in the case of mass influx or sudden increase of certain groups of asylum-seekers. In recent years, the Office of the Refugee Commissioner has granted some groups of such applicants “Provisional Humanitarian Protection” (PHP) pending a final decision on their application, until a recommendation on protection or return from UNHCR is issued.

“Provisional Humanitarian Protection” is essentially a form of temporary protection status pending full determination of the individual case. It is not contained in any law, so quite dependent on the Refugee Commissioner’s discretion. Provisional Humanitarian Protection also lacks clarity as to the content of associated rights and obligations but in general beneficiaries of PHP are treated in the same manner as asylum seekers. In recent years this form of protection was granted to groups of Eritreans, Libyans and Syrians.

Prior to the start of the Syrian conflict, Syrian asylum applicants constituted only a small proportion of those seeking international protection in Malta. In the large majority of cases, those Syrians who requested asylum would not have arrived by boat from Libya but applied after being apprehended for having overstayed their permission to stay.

In the initial months of the conflict, Syrian asylum-seekers were being granted 'Provisional Humanitarian Protection' pending a final determination of their need for international protection. This provided protection from forced removal yet applicants were still considered as being asylum-seekers, and were only entitled to the rights of the latter category.

Some months later when the conflict intensified and it seemed unlikely that the situation would be resolved swiftly, applications made by Syrian nationals were finally concluded. At this point a distinction was made between those Syrians who arrived in Malta following the start of the conflict and those who had been in Malta for a number of years and/or months and applied for protection after the start of the conflict.

Those who arrived in Malta and applied for asylum immediately following the start of the conflict had their claims examined in accordance with the normal procedure and were subsequently granted refugee status, or subsidiary protection on account of the serious harm they would face if sent back to Syria at that point in time. The applications of those who had been in Malta for some time and who only applied for asylum after the start of the conflict were also examined in line with the normal procedure, yet if it was found that they were not eligible for refugee status, instead of being granted subsidiary protection they were granted 'Temporary Humanitarian Protection' on the same ground that return to Syria would put them at risk because of the nature of the conflict. Temporary Humanitarian Protection, which is to be distinguished from provisional humanitarian protection as discussed above, is a domestic form of protection which, while still providing protection from forced return and a selection of the same rights of beneficiaries of subsidiary protection, is not set out in law and is granted on a discretionary basis.

In 2013 the Refugee Appeals Board disagreed with the assessment that the harm feared by Syrian asylum-seekers on account of the civil war rendered them eligible only for Temporary Humanitarian Protection. First-instance decisions were therefore overturned and the asylum-seekers concerned granted subsidiary protection. At around this same time, all Syrian applicants who had been granted THP had their protection changed to subsidiary protection; currently, all Syrian applicants who prove their Syrian nationality are granted, as a minimum, subsidiary protection. A number of persons have also been recognised as refugees.

Reception Conditions

A. Access and forms of reception conditions

1. Criteria and restrictions to access reception conditions

Indicators:

- Are asylum-seekers entitled to material reception conditions according to national legislation :
 - o During the accelerated procedure?
 Yes Yes, but limited to reduced material conditions No
 - o During admissibility procedures:
 Yes Yes, but limited to reduced material conditions No
 - o During the regular procedure:
 Yes Yes, but limited to reduced material conditions No
 - o during the Dublin procedure:
 Yes Yes, but limited to reduced material conditions No
 - o During the appeal procedure (first appeal and onward appeal):
 Yes Yes, but limited to reduced material conditions No
 - o In case of a subsequent application:
 Yes Yes, but limited to reduced material conditions No
- Is there a requirement in the law that only asylum-seekers who lack resources are entitled to material reception conditions? Yes No

Maltese law does not distinguish between the various procedures in order to determine entitlement to reception conditions, nor does it establish any distinction in the content of such conditions linked to the kind of procedure. Relevant legislation simply refers to ‘applicants’, defined in the Procedural Regulations as ‘applicants for asylum’. No reference is made to the duration of entitlement to reception conditions. In terms of the Reception Regulations, reduction in reception conditions is possible where an asylum-seeker abandons the determined place of residence, fails to comply with established reporting duties, fails to appear for the asylum interview, or has financial resources rendering them ineligible for material conditions. Furthermore, an asylum seeker who fails to show that the asylum application was made in accordance with the Refugees Act may be denied reception conditions.

Asylum seekers who do have access to personal financial resources may be determined to be ineligible for material conditions. No indication is provided as to the level of personal resources required and it is unclear how this is determined and by whom, including whether an assessment of risk of destitution is actually carried out. Notably, Regulation 11 of the Reception Regulations states that asylum-seekers who are working may be required to contribute to the cost of material reception conditions. Regulation 16 of the Reception Regulations states that asylum-seekers who feel aggrieved by a decision relating to the Regulations may be granted leave to appeal before the Immigration Appeals Board, established by the Immigration Act.

Practice until late 2012 was not to grant any reception conditions to asylum seekers arriving in Malta through regular channels, including in situations where the individual did not have personal financial resources to provide for themselves. Towards the end of 2012 the Agency for the Welfare of Asylum-Seekers (AWAS) amended this policy so as to include these asylum-seekers within their provision of reception conditions.

This means that those asylum-seekers who are not detained are entitled to reception conditions from the moment their claim is registered by RefCom.

With regard to subsequent applications, whereas the Reception Regulations apply to all asylum-seekers, in practice reception conditions may not be offered to asylum-seekers who might have benefitted from them earlier and subsequently departed from the Open Centre system. As a matter of policy, persons departing from the Open Centre system are not generally authorised to re-enter it, with consequential lack of provision of reception modalities.

Other practical obstacles relating to access to material reception conditions are essentially linked to the fact that all asylum-seekers entering Malta in an irregular manner – the vast majority of asylum-seekers – are detained in closed centres where the quality of material reception conditions could not meet the appropriate standards.⁶⁷ Furthermore, asylum-seekers who are not detained but offered accommodation in Open Centres also face practical challenges in accessing reception conditions due to the difficult living conditions in some of these centres, as also reported in the above-referenced reports.

2. Forms and levels of material reception conditions

Indicators:

- Amount of the financial allowance/vouchers granted to asylum-seekers on 31/12/2013 (per month, in original currency and in euros): €130.44 (per diem of €4.66)

The Reception Regulations cover the provision of ‘material conditions’, defined as including “housing, food and clothing, provided in kind, or as financial allowances or in vouchers, and a daily expenses allowance.” In practice, asylum-seekers in detention are provided with accommodation, food and clothing in kind. Asylum-seekers in Open Centres are provided with accommodation and a daily food and transport allowance.

The Reception Regulations generally specify that the level of material reception conditions should ensure a standard of living adequate for the health of the asylum-seekers, and capable of ensuring their subsistence. However, legislation does neither require a certain level of material reception conditions, nor does it set a minimum amount of financial allowance provided to detained asylum-seekers. Asylum-seekers living in Open Centres are given a small food and transport allowance, free access to state health services, in cases of children, free access to state education services. They are not entitled to social welfare benefits. Asylum seekers in detention enjoy free state health services, clearly within the practical limitations created by their presence within a detention centre.

Asylum-seekers living in Open Centres experience difficulties in securing an adequate standard of living. The daily allowance provided is barely sufficient to provide for the most basic of needs, and the lack of access to social welfare support exacerbates these difficulties. Social security policy and legislation precludes asylum-seekers from social welfare benefits, except those benefits which are defined as ‘contributory’. With contributory benefits entitlement is based on payment of a set number of contributions and on meeting the qualifying conditions, which effectively implies that only a tiny number of asylum seekers would qualify for such benefits, if any.

⁶⁷ See Human Rights Watch, ‘Boat Ride to Detention’, 2012; Council of Europe’s Commissioner for Human Rights, ‘Report by Thomas Hammarberg following his visit to Malta from 23 to 25 March 2011’, 2011, Council of Europe’s European Committee for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (CPT), ‘Report to the Maltese Government on the visit to Malta carried by the CPT from 19 to 26 May 2008’, 2011; International Commission of Jurists, ‘Malta: not here to stay’, 2012; Médecins sans Frontières, ‘Not Criminals’, 2009. Also Jesuit Refugee Service (Malta), ‘Becoming Vulnerable in Detention: National Report Malta’, 2007.

AWAS provides different amounts of daily allowance, associated with the asylum seeker's status: €4.66 for asylum seekers, persons returned under Dublin II receive €2.91, employed asylum-seekers receive nothing but are then granted €4.08 upon termination of employment and children receive €2.33 until they turn 17.

It is to be further noted that asylum seekers living in Open Centres are required to contribute the amount of €8 per week towards the cost of material living conditions.

Asylum seekers remain in detention until any of the following occur: if they are unaccompanied children, until their age is confirmed to be below 18 and they are issued with relevant documentation; if they are vulnerable adults, until the Agency for the Welfare of Asylum-seekers (AWAS) assesses them and confirms their vulnerability and they are issued with relevant documentation; if they remain within the asylum procedure, at any instance, for up to twelve months, they are released upon the expiry of the twelve months; their asylum procedure is positively concluded.

If they are living in Open Centres, it is difficult to calculate average length of stay as they will probably finalise their asylum procedure whilst in the Open Centre so consequently switching asylum status. Once their procedure is finalised, either positively or negatively, they will be allowed to remain in the Open Centre. Residence is usually for renewable four-month periods, following assessments by AWAS staff members.

Asylum seekers in detention receive less favourable treatment than nationals with regard to material support, due to the fact that they are detained. Persons living in Open Centres are treated less favourably than nationals in relation to access to social welfare support, as they are denied access.

3. Types of accommodation

Indicators:

- Type(s) of accommodation most frequently used in a regular procedure:
 Reception centre Hotel/Hostel Emergency Shelter private housing Other (Detention centre)
- Type(s) of accommodation most frequently used in an accelerated procedure:
 Reception centre Hotel/Hostel Emergency Shelter private housing Other (Detention centre)
- Number of places in all the reception centres (both permanent and for first arrivals): Not available
- Number of places in private accommodation: Approximately 400.
- Number of reception centres: 8
- Are there any problems of overcrowding in the reception centres? Yes No
- Are there instances of asylum seekers not having access to reception accommodation because of a shortage of places? Yes No
- What is, if available, the average length of stay of asylum-seekers in the reception centres? Months, until their status is determined, then they are allowed to remain, as described above.
- Are unaccompanied children ever accommodated with adults in practice? Yes No

The number of available places in reception centres is not available, as these figures were not provided by Agency for the Welfare of Asylum-seekers (AWAS). 8 reception centres are being used, 6 of which are run by AWAS and the remaining 2 by NGOs. The latter do, however, fall within AWAS' overall reception system. Over-crowding becomes a problem at various times of the year, owing primarily to increased releases from detention and the failure of residents to leave the Open Centres.

One NGO also offers accommodation in the form of private houses/flats, also falling within AWAS' overall reception system. In exceptional cases, particularly where the existing facilities are overcrowded, alternative venues are utilised as for example shelters for homeless persons. Persons applying at the airport are generally transferred to the main Open Centres.

Some families, single women and unaccompanied children are accommodated in separate Open Centres although families also often share accommodation with other groups. Foster families are hardly ever resorted to and in such cases these would be processed through the mainstream fostering procedures.

Unaccompanied children are generally accommodated alone, or in a centre where families are also accommodated, although the spaces are kept separate. The Reception Regulations do specify (Regulation 15) that unaccompanied children aged 16 years or over may be accommodated with adult asylum seekers, and it has happened in practice.

Apart from the above considerations (age, family composition), there are no clear allocation criteria on the basis of which persons are accommodated in specific centres. There does not seem to be a contingency plan for situations of severe over-crowding.

Whilst efforts are made to segregate single women from single men, it is not uncommon for men and women, single or otherwise to be accommodated in the same centre,

4. Conditions in Reception Facilities

Conditions in the open centres vary greatly from one centre to another, yet overcrowding and related concerns are a common problem. In general, the centres provide sleeping quarters either in the form of rooms housing between 4 (the centres for unaccompanied children) to 24 people (Marsa Open Centre), or mobile metal containers sleeping up to 8 persons per container (Hal-Far Hangar site (HOC), and Hal Far Tent Centre (HTV)). Common cooking areas are provided, as also common showers and toilets. The large number of persons accommodated in each centre (e.g. around 400 in Marsa Open Centre, 500 in Hangar site) inevitably results in severe hygiene and maintenance problems.

Despite the very large numbers of residents, the majority of open centres are run by small teams that are responsible for the centres' daily management and also for the provision of information and support to residents. Individuals are also referred to Agency for the Welfare of Asylum Seekers' (AWAS) social welfare team as necessary.

The majority of centres do not offer any form of activities for residents, yet these are able to freely leave the centre as they please.

Overall, the living conditions in the open centres, save for a few exceptions, are extremely challenging. Low hygiene levels, severe over-crowding, lack of physical security, location of most centres in a remote area of Malta, poor material structures and occasional infestation of rats are the main general concerns expressed in relation to the open centres⁶⁸.

⁶⁸ See for example, International Commission of Jurists, Not Here to Stay, May 2012.

5. Reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions

Indicators:

- Does the legislation provide for the possibility to reduce material reception conditions?
 Yes No
- Does the legislation provide for the possibility to withdraw material reception conditions?
 Yes No

The Reception Regulations state that reception conditions may be withdrawn or reduced where the asylum seeker abandons the established place of residence without providing information or consent (it is not defined by law when a place is considered abandoned; however, practice shows that this is the case where a resident fails to sign the residence sheet for a set number of times without a valid excuse); where the asylum seeker does not comply with reporting duties; where the asylum seeker fails to appear for the asylum interview; or where the asylum seeker has concealed financial resources.⁶⁹

The Regulations state that such decisions shall be taken “individually, objectively and impartially and reasons shall be given,” with due consideration to the principle of proportionality. Whether this assessment includes risk of destitution cannot be confirmed as this is not specifically mentioned and no such cases have ever arisen.

Asylum seekers may appeal these decisions before the Immigration Appeals Board, in accordance with the Immigration Act. When these decisions are taken regarding reception conditions in detention, it is the Detention Service taking them, whilst AWAS would take these decisions in relation to residents of its Open Centres. It is unclear how reception conditions of asylum-seekers living in the community, and not in any AWAS-coordinated centre, are regulated as relevant legislation does not provide this information and no such situation has ever arisen.

Appeals to the Immigration Appeals Board are particularly problematic for asylum seekers who are detained, as no information is provided on how to access the Board and its procedures. This was also highlighted by the European Court of Human Rights in its Article 5 cases against Malta.⁷⁰

6. Access to reception centres by third parties

Indicators:

- Do family members, legal advisers, UNHCR and/or NGOs have access to reception centres?
 Yes with limitations No

Access to detention centres is regulated by the Immigration Police, which in turn needs to provide authorisation. No formal procedures exist for friends and family members to visit detained persons and practice is erratic and largely discretionary. When such visits are allowed, logistical modalities are also extremely erratic and discretionary with no clear procedures and rules.

UNHCR, legal advisers and NGOs are allowed access at any time in order for them to provide their services to detained persons. No specific criteria seem to apply, except possibly the provision of services or support to detained asylum seekers. Persons in detention centres encounter difficulties communicating with legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs primarily due to the fact that little or no information is provided on the existence and means of contacting these entities, and actual contact is only possible to a limited extent and due to the limited means available to NGOs and UNHCR. .

Access to Open Centres is regulated by the Agency for the Welfare of Asylum seekers, for which permission is also required. Criteria to be granted access to the Centres are unclear, although it does not seem to be problematic for individuals/organisations wishing to provide a service to residents. Non-service related visits are not granted permission easily, as is the case for academics, friends, research students, reporters, and so forth.

7. Addressing special reception needs of vulnerable persons

Indicators:

- Is there an assessment of special reception needs of vulnerable persons in practice? Yes No

The Reception Regulations state that individual evaluations will be conducted to assess the special needs of vulnerable persons.⁷¹ The Regulations provide an indicative and therefore non-exhaustive list of vulnerable persons: children, unaccompanied children and pregnant women. In terms of the Regulations, this process is intended to assess the nature of the special needs, rather than to identify vulnerable individuals. As such, Maltese legislation does not regulate the formal identification of vulnerable persons. In the detention context, vulnerability assessment is conducted by the Agency for the Welfare of Asylum-Seekers through interviews conducted primarily by social or care workers. Outside of detention, no information is available as to the details of any formal vulnerability assessment conducted for the purpose of addressing specific reception needs.

Beyond the general principle, specific measures provided by law for vulnerable persons are as follows: maintenance of family unity where possible (Regulation 7); particular, yet undefined, attention to ensure that material reception conditions are such to ensure an adequate standard of living (Regulation 11(2)). In practice, persons identified as vulnerable by the Agency for the Welfare of Asylum-seekers (AWAS) are released from detention centres when they are identified as such, and necessary release formalities are finalised. Unaccompanied children are then accommodated in separate and more specialised Open Centres. All other vulnerable individuals are treated on a case-by-case basis by AWAS social workers, with the view to providing the required care and support.

Despite all of the above, due to resource and infrastructural limitations some vulnerable individuals are either never identified or, once identified, are unable to access the care and support they require.

With regard to ongoing monitoring, whilst no formal monitoring system exists within detention, vulnerable individuals may be referred to AWAS at any point of their stay. Within open centres, no formal monitoring mechanism is established, yet vulnerable individuals may approach or be referred to open centre management and staff.

8. Provision of information

The Reception Regulations requires that within 15 days from lodging the asylum application the Principal Immigration Officer ensures that all applicants are informed of reception benefits and obligations, and of groups and individuals providing legal and other forms of assistance.⁷²

⁷¹ Regulation 14 Reception Regulations.

⁷² Regulation 4 Reception Regulations.

In the detention centres, all persons are within days provided with the document entitled ‘Your Entitlements, Responsibilities and Obligations while in Detention’ a publication of the former Ministry for Justice and Home Affairs.⁷³ The document provides information, albeit in a basic format, on: Dublin procedures; asylum procedure; the Immigration Appeals Board; daily material reception condition rights (e.g. catering, clothing, correspondence, hygiene, etc.) and various responsibilities and obligations (e.g. information disclosure, discipline, personal hygiene, medical self-care, etc.). The information contained in the booklet is not deemed to be adequate or sufficient due to the limited quantity of information actually provided, the languages in which it is available (English, French and Arabic), the language style and the generality of the issues presented.

In open centres, within days of their placement residents are provided with detailed information on their rights and obligations, covering issues such as maintenance, registrations, financial allowance, and so forth. No information is provided on the asylum procedure since in the vast majority of cases this would have been already provided in detention. In fact, asylum-seekers who would not have been detained prior to accommodation in an open centre do not receive any information on the procedure, unless provided by NGOs.

9. Freedom of movement

Asylum seekers not in detention enjoy freedom of movement around the island(s). All persons living in an Open Centre, are required to regularly confirm residence through signing; these signing procedures also confirm eligibility for the per diem (see section on material reception conditions) and to ensure a continued right to reside in the Centre.

Malta does not operate any dispersal scheme, since residence in open centres remains voluntary. Nonetheless, placement in a particular open centre generally implies limited possibility to change centre, although such decisions could be taken on a case-by-case basis. Residing in an open centre brings with it entitlement to a financial per diem, intended to cover food and transportation costs. With the exception of a few cases, following a specific request which is assessed on a case-by-case basis, persons living outside the open centres do not receive this per diem.

Beyond individual situations, movement between centres is sometimes affected due to space considerations. Rarely, asylum-seekers might be moved from one centre to another in order to maintain security and order within particular centres.

In terms of the Reception Regulations, all reception-related decisions may be appealed to the Immigration Appeals Board yet this appeal process is hardly ever resorted to by asylum-seekers or other open centre residents. This said, it should be stated that no information is provided about the possibility to appeal or about the applicable procedure. Moreover, the time limit for the filing of an appeal is three working days, as in the case of most other appeals to the Immigration Appeals Board.

⁷³ The document is not currently available online, but is extensively referred to in the above-mentioned reports. Reference is also made to it in Professor Henry J. Frendo, ‘National Report on the Implementation of the Directive on Reception Conditions for Asylum-seekers in Malta’. The report’s full text is may be seen in the Annex to the ‘Responses of the Maltese Government to the report of the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (CPT) on its visit to Malta from 15 to 21 June 2005’, 2007.

B. Employment and education

1. Access to the labour market

Indicators:

- Does the legislation allow for access to the labour market for asylum-seekers? Yes No
- If applicable, what is the time limit after which asylum-seekers can access the labour market: 12 months.
- Are there restrictions to access employment in practice? Yes No

Asylum seekers are entitled to access the labour market, without limitations on the nature of employment they may seek. In terms of the Reception Regulations this access should be granted no later than 12 months following the lodging of the asylum application. Asylum seekers will be given an employment licence that lasts for 6 months, and can be renewed. Fees are payable for new licences, and for every renewal.

In practice, most asylum seekers are detained and are therefore unable to access the labour market. Asylum seekers who are not detained face a number of difficulties, namely: language obstacles, limited or no academic or professional background, intense competition with refugees and other migrants, limited or seasonal employment opportunities.

A number of vocational training courses are available to asylum-seekers, yet not specifically organised for them. Eligibility conditions vary between courses and generally reflect eligibility criteria for Maltese nationals.

2. Access to education

Indicators:

- Does the legislation provide for access to education for asylum seeking children? Yes No
- Are children able to access education in practice? Yes No

Article 13(2) of the Refugees Act states that asylum seekers shall have access to state-funded education and training. This general statement is complemented by the Reception Regulations, wherein asylum-seeking children are entitled to access the education system in the same manner as Maltese nationals, and this may only be postponed for up to 3 months from the date of submission of the asylum application. This 3-month period may be extended to 1 year “where specific education is provided in order to facilitate access to the education system” (proviso to Regulation 9(2)). Primary and secondary education is offered to asylum-seekers up to the age of fifteen/sixteen, as this is also the cut-off date for Maltese students.

Detained children are not provided with any form of education whilst they are in detention.

The practical difficulties faced by asylum seekers’ children relate to the absence of a formal assessment process to determine the most appropriate entry level for children; the absence of preparatory classes; limited or no educational background; language difficulties. Access to state schools is free of charge. These rules apply for primary and secondary education. The location of centres might be problematic as the transport provided by the schools (public or private) is not free of charge. In practice, children do attend school. Children with particular needs are treated in the same manner as Maltese children with particular needs, whereby a Learning Support Assistant (LSA) may be appointed to provide individual attention to the child. Yet it is noted that in the situation of migrant or refugee children, language issues are not appropriately provided for, with possible implications on the child's long-term development⁷⁴.

Adults and young asylum seekers are eligible to apply to be exempted from fees at state educational institutions, including the University of Malta, vocational training courses, languages lessons and other adult education.⁷⁵ Vocational training courses offered by the Employment and Training Corporation are also accessible to asylum seekers.

Beneficiaries of protection are increasingly making use of these educational services, primarily since information on their availability is becoming available to the various communities through NGO activities and also increased openness by the relevant governmental authorities.

C. Health care

Indicators:

- Is access to emergency health care for asylum-seekers guaranteed in national legislation?
 Yes No
- In practice, do asylum-seekers have adequate access to health care?
 Yes with limitations No
- Is specialised treatment for victims of torture or traumatised asylum-seekers available in practice? Yes Yes, to a limited extent No
- If material reception conditions are reduced withdrawn, are asylum seekers still given access to health care? Yes No

Article 13(2) of the Refugees Act states that asylum seekers shall have access to state medical care, with little additional information provided. The Reception Regulations further stipulate that the material reception conditions should ensure the health of all asylum seekers, yet no specification is provided as to the level of health care that should be guaranteed. Practical difficulties arise for asylum seekers due to the fact that they are detained, as the detention system seriously hinders their access to health services. Although health services are provided in the detention centres, these are not sufficient to meet the entirety of needs in the centres. Asylum-seekers who are not detained may access the state health services, with the main obstacles being mainly linked to language difficulties.

Furthermore, institutional obstacles prevent effective recourse to the mainstream health services when required, including in cases of emergencies: limited transport availability, absence of full-time medical staff in the detention centres, informal transactions for medicine, etc.

Persons suffering mental health problems fall under the above-mentioned legal provisions. As with vulnerable persons, detained asylum seekers suffering from mental health problems face the practical difficulty of not being identified, owing to the absence of a formal identification process or of full-time specialists within the detention centres. Once identified, they are generally transferred to Mount Carmel mental health hospital for treatment.

No specialised services exist in Malta for victims of torture or trauma, primarily owing to the lack of such capacity on the island.

⁷⁵ In terms of Ministry of Education and Employment, ‘Policy on Exemptions from Fees at State Educational Institutions’, September 2012.

Decisions to reduce or withdraw material reception conditions would not affect access to health care.

Detention of Asylum-seekers

A. General

Indicators:

- Total number of asylum seekers detained in the previous year (including those detained in the course of the asylum procedure and those who applied for asylum from detention): Approximately 1,900.
- Number of asylum seekers detained or an estimation at the end of the previous year (specify if it is an estimation): 497⁷⁶
- Number of detention centres: 3, only 2 of which are currently in use.
- Total capacity: Not available.

There are currently 2 immigration detention facilities in use, 1 in Safi Barracks – B Block – and 1 in Lyster Barracks – Hermes Block. The facilities known as the Warehouses in Safi Barracks were closed for refurbishment at the beginning of 2014 and have not been used since. All the facilities are used to detain both asylum-seekers and immigrants awaiting removal. At the end of 2013, there were around 500 detainees, with more than 1,900 individuals passing through detention throughout the year.⁷⁷

It should be noted that since 2002 the majority of the asylum-seeking population in Malta arrived by boat, having travelled in an irregular manner from Libya. Most are brought ashore after they are rescued from vessels in distress; upon arrival all are issued with a Return Decision and Removal Order in terms of the Immigration Act and placed in detention. Submission of an application for international protection does not imply release from detention. As the majority of asylum-seekers reach Malta after travelling irregularly by boat from Libya, most asylum-seekers are detained.

In 2011, out of a total of 1886 asylum seekers, 85% applied for asylum after they had been apprehended and placed in detention in terms of the Immigration Act. Of these, 98% (1579 persons) were so-called 'boat-arrivals', while 2% [31 persons] were apprehended by the immigration authorities for illegal entry or stay.⁷⁸

⁷⁶ This figure includes asylum seekers and also failed asylum seekers as the authorities are unable to provide disaggregated figures.

B. Grounds for detention

Indicators:

- In practice, are most asylum seekers detained
 - o on the territory: Yes No
 - o at the border: Yes No
- Are asylum seekers detained in practice during the Dublin procedure?
 Frequently Rarely Never
- Are asylum seekers detained during a regular procedure?
 Frequently Rarely Never
- Are unaccompanied asylum-seeking children detained?
 Frequently Rarely Never
- If frequently or rarely, are they only detained in border/transit zones? Yes No
- Are asylum-seeking children in families ever detained?
 Frequently Rarely Never
- What is the maximum detention period set in the legislation (inc extensions): 12 months⁷⁹
- In practice, how long in average are asylum-seekers detained? 4-8 months⁷⁹

Law, policy and practice on detention

National law does not specifically provide for the detention of asylum seekers, whether during the regular procedure or during the accelerated or Dublin procedures.

When asylum seekers are detained it is in terms of the Immigration Act after they have been refused admission into Malta or issued with a Removal Order.

In terms of Article 10 of the said Act, a person refused admission into Malta may be detained on land and while they are detained, they shall be deemed to be in legal custody and not to have landed. Article 14 provides that the Principal Immigration Officer may issue a Removal Order against a person deemed to be a 'prohibited immigrant' in terms of Article 5 of the same Act; once such an order is made, the person against whom it is issued shall be held in custody until they are removed from Malta (Article 14(3)).

Persons who apply for asylum after they are taken into custody remain in detention until their asylum application is determined. In terms of national policy on reception of irregular arrivals, which is outlined in a national policy document entitled 'Refugees, Irregular Immigrants and Integration': *"Although by landing in Malta without the necessary documentation and authorisation irregular immigrants are not considered to have committed a criminal offence, in the interest of national security and public order they are still kept in detention until their claim to their country of origin and other submissions are examined and verified"*⁸⁰.

The only exception are vulnerable asylum-seekers; these are released from detention in terms of government policy to await the outcome of their asylum application in the community, once their vulnerability is confirmed through an individual assessment conducted by the Agency for the Welfare of Asylum-seekers (AWAS) an alternative non-custodial placement is identified.

As a rule, persons with irregular migration status who apply for asylum before they are apprehended by the immigration authorities for irregular entry or stay are not detained pending the outcome of their asylum application, although this is in fact a small percentage of annual asylum applications.

⁷⁹ This is an approximation as no official statistics are available. It includes also the appeal stage of the asylum procedure as in most cases procedures at first instance are concluded within 6 months.

⁸⁰ MJHA and MFSS, January 2005, at p. 11.

Policy on detention of vulnerable asylum-seekers

In terms of the above-cited government policy document “irregular immigrants who, by virtue of their age and/or physical condition, are considered to be vulnerable are exempt from detention and are accommodated in alternative centres”.⁸¹ The said document contains an inclusive list of those categories of migrants considered vulnerable, which includes: “unaccompanied minors, persons with disability, families and pregnant women”.⁸²

In order to give effect to this policy, two procedures were put in place to assess ‘vulnerability’ in individual cases. These procedures are known as the Age Assessment Procedure and the Vulnerable Adults Assessment Procedure. Both of these procedures are implemented by AWAS. Although AWAS has not specifically and legally been assigned responsibility for assessing vulnerability,⁸³ in practice, it has full responsibility for these procedures.

It should be noted that in cases where vulnerability is immediately apparent and relatively easy to establish, e.g. in the case of family units with very young children or pregnant women, the assessment procedure is quite straightforward and release is usually effected within one or two weeks of arrival in Malta. Where vulnerability is less evident, e.g. in the case of unaccompanied children who are not obviously of minor age, or where the individual concerned is being assessed with a view to release on grounds of mental health, psychological problems or chronic illness, the assessment procedure adopted is necessarily more complex and often takes considerably longer.

It should be noted that, although these procedures can have a determining impact on the continued detention of individuals detained in terms of the Immigration Act, they are not formally regulated by law or by publicly available rules or guidelines.

Alternatives to detention

Neither law nor policy specifically require that alternatives to detention are in place, however both law and policy make passing reference to alternatives.

The above-mentioned national policy document, ‘Irregular Immigrants, Refugees and Integration Policy Document’, contains a reference to ‘alternative centres’ in relation to “irregular immigrants who, by virtue of their age and/or physical condition, are considered to be vulnerable”, stating that they “are exempt from detention and are accommodated in alternative centres”.⁸⁴

Moreover, Regulation 11(8) of the Returns Regulations,⁸⁵ states that a third country national may be kept in detention in order to carry out a return and removal procedure unless “other sufficient and less coercive measures” are applicable.

In practice detention is the automatic consequence of a decision to issue a removal order and it would appear that, in the vast majority of cases, alternatives to detention are not considered. It is unclear whether an assessment is made of the risk of absconding in each case; what is certain is that almost all including those deemed to be prohibited immigrants are subsequently detained.

⁸² Ibid, at p. 13.

⁸³ The functions of the Agency are set out in Regulation 6 of the Agency for the Welfare of Asylum-seekers Regulations – S.L. 271.11.

⁸⁴ MJHA and MFSS, January 2005, at p. 11.

⁸⁵ S.L.217.12

As a rule, even those who are exempt from detention in terms of government policy are detained upon arrival; they are however released after the necessary assessment is conducted, medical clearance is obtained and an alternative placement is identified.

It should be noted that, in addition to the above, Article 25A(6) of the Immigration Act allows the Immigration Appeals Board to grant provisional release from detention upon request, to anyone who is a party to proceedings before it, subject to any conditions, it may deem fit. The Criminal Code provisions on bail apply to such requests. In practice such release is normally granted to asylum-seekers pending the outcome of an appeal from the removal order/return decision, upon payment of a financial guarantee and the provision of an assurance of accommodation and financial support, on condition that they sign at a police station a number of times per week. As such proceedings are usually put off until any asylum claim is finally determined; this effectively means that they are not detained for the duration of their asylum procedure. In practice this remedy is used mostly by over-stayers; boat arrivals very rarely have the resources necessary to avail themselves of this remedy. There are no available statistics on compliance rates.

Authority responsible

As was explained above, national law does not specifically regulate the detention of asylum seekers. In terms of the Immigration Act detention is the automatic consequence of a decision to refuse admission into national territory and/or the issuing of a removal order. The Principal Immigration Officer is the authority competent to issue return decisions and removal orders and to refuse or grant admission into national territory.

Length of detention

National law only specifies a time limit for the detention of third country nationals detained with a view to removal.

Asylum seekers who are granted some form of protection are detained for as long as it takes to determine their asylum application.

The maximum duration for the detention of asylum seekers, in terms of national policy but not clearly contained in law, is set at 12 months. This was introduced following the enactment of the Reception Regulations, which transposed the Reception Directive into national legislation. It is based on Regulation 10, which provides that asylum-seekers who are still awaiting a first-instance decision after 12 months must be allowed access to the labour market.⁸⁶

To date this has been interpreted to mean that all asylum-seekers, whose application is pending after 12 months, are released to live in the community and allowed access to the labour market.

When computing the 12-month period, any time spent outside the detention centre, e.g. if the person concerned escaped, is not counted.

⁸⁶ Regulation 10 of the Reception of Asylum-seekers (Minimum Standards) Regulations (Legal Notice 320 of 2005), which echoes the provisions of Article 11 of the Reception Directive (Council Directive 2003/9/EC of 27 January 2003 laying down minimum standards for the reception of asylum-seekers.

C. Detention conditions⁸⁷

Indicators:

- Does the law allow detaining asylum-seekers in prisons for the purpose of the asylum procedure (i.e. not as a result of criminal charges)? Yes No
- If so, are asylum-seekers ever detained in practice in prisons for the purpose of the asylum procedures? Yes No
- Do detainees have access to health care in practice? Yes No
 - o If yes, is it limited to emergency health care? Yes No
- Is access to detention centres allowed to
 - o Lawyers: Yes Yes, but with some limitations No
 - o NGOs: Yes Yes, but with some limitations No
 - o UNHCR: Yes Yes, but with some limitations No
 - o Family members: Yes Yes, but with some limitations No

Pursuant to the Immigration Act, anyone who enters the territory without the necessary documents is detained, either until their removal is possible, or, in the case of asylum seekers, until their asylum application has been decided, and they have been granted international protection.⁸⁸ Asylum seekers and other third country nationals, who have over-stayed their visa, are detained in the same military barracks, which are overcrowded, offer inadequate sanitation and hygiene facilities, and allow no privacy for the detainees. Whilst detainees are provided with a bed each, there is little space in between the beds and no place where they may store their personal possessions. Detainees are provided with cleaning materials and are expected to take care of the cleaning of the centre. Although detainees are issued with basic items of clothing upon arrival, there is no systematic or consistent practice for the distribution of clothes which are weather-appropriate. Most of the clothing which is provided to detainees is donated on a charitable basis to the detention service management and is then distributed accordingly. Moreover, there is little to no heating or ventilation, exposing migrants to extreme cold and heat.

This state of affairs has been acknowledged by the European Court of Human Rights which held that the conditions in which the applicant in the case before it, a young Somali migrant detained for removal for fourteen and a half months at Hermes Block, Lyster Barracks, constituted inhuman, cruel and degrading treatment. The Court noted that, inter alia, 'dormitories were shared by so many people with little or no privacy, that she suffered from heat and cold, that an inadequate diet was provided, [and] that there was a lack of female staff to deal with the women detainees'.⁸⁹

All detainees are seen by a doctor in the first week after their arrival. The services of a doctor are available in the detention centres between two to three mornings a week. Communication with the health professionals however is very often difficult, if not impossible, as the services of a translator or cultural mediator are not provided. In emergencies, the detainees are usually taken to the nearest health centre. Migrants and asylum seekers requiring more specialised care are referred to the general hospital for an appointment. Medicines prescribed by the doctors in detention, are brought from pharmacies outside the centre, resulting in undue delays - from a few days up to a couple of weeks.⁹⁰

Detainees are given daily access to a yard from late morning to late afternoon, however in one particular centre, access to the yard is limited to only one hour and a half per day.⁹¹ There are no recreational or educational activities provided. The asylum seekers have one television set per centre, and are given a football for the men and a volleyball for the women. None of the centres or facilities is fully accessible to people with disabilities.⁹²

Persons with special reception needs are usually identified by visiting NGOs who then refer the individuals in question to AWAS for vulnerability assessment. In 2013, AWAS implemented a project whereby all detainees were interviewed in a profiling exercise. Individuals who were flagged as being in a particularly vulnerable situation were then referred to the Vulnerable Adult Assessment Team within AWAS for assessment. Detainees who are referred for vulnerability assessment remain in detention pending the outcome of the assessment procedure. In practice, vulnerable persons and persons with special needs are not provided with specific support or special treatment when in detention. They receive the same medical care as the general detainee population.

Men are detained separately from women, as are families and couples. Unaccompanied children awaiting their assessment however, at times waiting for more than three months before being released, are detained with unrelated adults.⁹³ Some children have also reported to NGOs that it is common to be bullied by the adults. There are no educational or non-educational activities organised for children, and they are subjected to the same conditions as the other detainees.

Once released from detention, children and unaccompanied children are entitled to free state education. Upon their release from detention, families and unaccompanied children are accommodated in small open centres, where they are followed by either a community worker, or a social worker.

JRS, Integra Foundation, Malta Red Cross and UNHCR visit detention centres on a weekly basis, with other organisations visiting on a less regular basis. A request for a permit to visit detention is made to the Principal Immigration Officer, and once this permit is obtained, access to detention is possible. Representatives of different religions are also given unrestricted access. However, detained asylum seekers and undocumented migrants are not permitted visits by family or friends.

Moreover, reading and leisure materials are not systematically provided and detainees rely on NGO staff visiting detention as well as friends and family on the outside to bring them books, magazines and other basic recreational items. In Hermes Block, Lyster Barracks, an NGO which provides language instruction runs a small library whereby detainees may have access to a number of books and other reading material for educational purposes. Detainees only have access to news and other media through the television set which is in place per centre as no newspapers are ever provided. There are no computers or internet access within the centres.

Detention centres are managed by the Detention Service (DS), a government body that falls under the Ministry for Home Affairs and National Security. The DS was set up specifically “to cater for the operation of all closed accommodation centres; provide secure but humane accommodation for detained persons; and maintain a safe and secure environment”⁹⁴ within detention centres. The DS is neither established nor regulated by a specific law. It is made up of personnel seconded from the armed forces and civilians specifically recruited for the purpose, many of whom are ex-security personnel. DS staff receives some in-service training, however people recruited for the post of DS officer or seconded from the security services are not required to have particular skills or competencies.

In recent years there have been a number of incidents within the centres which raised concern because of allegations of excessive use of force, as well as because of the lack of any systematic review of DS conduct and of any effective remedies to provide redress wherever abuse or ill-treatment by DS staff is alleged.

The use of excessive force and other questionable forms of punishment remains an issue primarily in contexts such as protests or escapes from detention, when force is used in an attempt to assert control or, at times, to discipline detainees.

In recent years two migrants, Mamdou Kamara (June 29, 2012) and Christian Ifeanyi Nwokaye (16-17 April 2011), died following recapture by the DS after they escaped from custody. In both cases there were allegations that the migrants were beaten during the capture. According to newspaper reports, Mamdou Kamara died from a cardiac arrest triggered by intense pain when he was struck in his groin area.⁹⁵ Christian Ifeanyi Nwokaye died of a cardiac arrest one hour after being placed in an isolation cell; unlike Mamadou Kamara, there is no evidence that he died as a direct result of his injuries.⁹⁶ A number of AFM soldiers are currently undergoing criminal proceedings in both cases: in the case of Mamadou Kamara two soldiers stand charged with murder and another one with tampering with evidence; in the case of Christian Ifeanyi Nwokaye three soldiers stand charged with involuntary homicide.

Parallel to these judicial proceedings, two inquiries into the incidents were also instituted. In the case of Nwokaye, the board of inquiry was not in a position to finalise its work since it was not granted access to the autopsy results, whilst the Kamara inquiry was either never finalised or its conclusions not made public. Both instances highlight the lack of public accountability and transparency with regard to the detention regime and to the human rights violations occurring within the centres.⁹⁷

Since 2008 there have been at least four detainee protests where there were allegations of excessive use of force by the DS. The first was at Safi on March 13 and 24, 2008; on that occasion an independent inquiry concluded that excessive force had indeed been used but there was insufficient evidence to recommend prosecution. There were two other protests, one in Ta' Kandja on July 8, 2009 and another in Safi on August 16, 2011, where in spite of the allegations of excessive use of force no investigation was ordered into the conduct of the DS. In both cases a number of detainees were arraigned in Court and charged with causing damage to government property, breaching the good order and public peace, refusing to obey legitimate orders, slightly injuring police officers and DS staff and unlawful assembly. The case regarding the incident on August 16, 2011 is pending till today. The other was concluded after the migrants pleaded guilty to the charges. The most recent incident took place on February 25, 2014 at Lyster Barracks. On this occasion an inquiry was ordered, and the Board of Inquiry found no excessive force was used.⁹⁸ However concerns were raised regarding the independence and impartiality of the Board of Inquiry as all the members worked within the Ministry responsible for the Detention Service.⁹⁹

The 2005 policy document, Irregular Immigrants, Refugees and Integration states that:

“Media access to detention centres shall be restricted so as to:

- protect potential refugees;
- protect detainees’ family and friends who are still in their homeland from retribution by the regime against which protection claims are being made...

Media visits to detention centres may in exceptional cases be authorized as part of the government’s aim to promote an informed public debate on issues concerning irregular immigrants and asylum seekers.”¹⁰⁰

In practice the media were allowed access to detention several times, particularly in recent years. As with all other visits to detention, access must be authorized in advance, usually following a written request.

There is no published policy position regarding visits by politicians, but politicians have visited the detention centres on occasion.

D. Procedural safeguards and Judicial Review of the detention order

Indicators:

- Is there an automatic review of the lawfulness of detention? Yes No

Detention is effectively authorised by an administrative authority, as it is the automatic consequence of a decision taken by the Principal Immigration Officer. It is not subject to automatic judicial review. Although there are a number of remedies available to detainees to challenge their detention, in Louled Massoud vs. Malta, the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) clearly stated that three of these remedies do not qualify as “speedy, judicial remedies” in terms of Art 5(4) of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR).¹⁰¹

To date, detention is not imposed by means of a detention order; it is the automatic consequence of the issuing of a removal order in terms of the Immigration Act. The removal order contains the reasons why the individual concerned is considered a prohibited immigrant in terms of law, as opposed to the reasons for detention; it also states that the individual concerned will be held in detention until removal is effected.

It would appear that asylum-seekers who arrive in Malta in an irregular manner are not always effectively informed of the possibility and/or of the means of challenging the removal order issued against them. The removal order, which is often issued in English, does state that the person against whom the order is issued has three working days in which to appeal the said order, however asylum seekers arriving in Malta irregularly by boat rarely, if ever, appeal from the Removal Order.

Human rights action before the national courts

This remedy, which allows a detainee to challenge the lawfulness of their detention in terms of the ECHR and the Constitution of Malta, failed the test as, although it is clearly judicial, it is far from speedy. In addition to the length of time for delivery of judgements, Constitutional proceedings are virtually inaccessible to detainees as in practice most asylum seekers do not have access to a lawyer who could file a court case on their behalf. In fact to date most cases have been filed by lawyers working in collaboration with NGOs assisting asylum seekers. In such cases there is no waiver of court fees, as there would be if the applicant had been granted the benefit of legal aid.

Application in terms of Article 469A of the Criminal Code

This remedy too allows a detainee to challenge the lawfulness of their detention before the Court of Magistrates. Though this remedy is both speedy and judicial in nature, it failed the test because it does not allow for an examination of the lawfulness of detention in terms of Article 5 of the ECHR.

Application in terms of Article 25A of the Immigration Act

In terms of Article 25A of the Immigration Act, the Immigration Appeals Board is competent to “hear and determine applications made by persons in custody in virtue only of a deportation or removal order to be released from custody pending the determination of any application under the Refugees Act or otherwise pending their deportation... the Board shall only grant release... where in its opinion the continued detention of such person is taking into account all the circumstances of the case, unreasonable as regards duration or because there is no reasonable prospect of deportation within a reasonable time.”

This remedy too was deemed to be inadequate by the ECtHR for a number of reasons: the fact that the relevant legal provision is limited since a request for release from custody has no prospect of success in the event that the identity of the detainee, including his nationality, has yet to be verified, in particular where they have destroyed their travel or identification documents or used fraudulent documents in order to mislead the authorities; the fact that over the years there were only very few cases where this remedy was used successfully; and the duration of such proceedings.

Application in terms of Regulation 10(11) of the Common Standards and Procedures for Returning Illegally Staying Third Country Nationals Regulations

Since the transposition of the Return Directive, the law provides for the possibility to institute proceedings to challenge the lawfulness of detention before the Immigration Appeals Board.

In addition to the fact that the extent to which this Act applies to detained asylum seekers, who by definition cannot be subject to removal proceedings, is questionable, from the text of the law it would appear that migrants arriving by boat who are apprehended at sea or upon arrival and migrants who are refused admission into Malta are exempt from the benefits of this provision, as Regulation 11(1) states that:

“The provisions of Part IV shall not apply to third country nationals who are subject to a refusal of entry in accordance with Article 13 of the Schengen Borders Code or who are apprehended or intercepted by the competent authorities in connection with the irregular crossing by sea or air of the external border of Malta and who have not subsequently obtained an authorisation or a right to stay in Malta”.

This said, in one case the Board held that the benefits of this provision are indeed applicable to detained asylum seekers, however it ceases to apply once their application is no longer pending.

To date the remedy has not proved particularly speedy, with few applications decided prior to the applicant's release from detention in terms of Government policy. Moreover, it remains to be seen how the Board will interpret the concept of 'lawfulness'.

Detainees who apply for asylum from detention are subject to the same asylum procedure as those who apply from the community. The Refugee Commissioner will proceed to examine the application of the detained asylum seeker in the same manner as those who are not deprived of their liberty. The main difference lies in that detainees are escorted to the Refugee Commissioner's offices and are not informed in advance of the date of their interview. They are usually informed on the day that their presence is required at the Office of the Refugee Commissioner. Detained asylum-seekers do however face considerable difficulties in obtaining documents and compiling all the information which they might want to present in support of their application as their means of communication are severely restricted. Very often, detained asylum-seekers rely on support from NGOs to obtain documentation and any other information which might be required.

E. Legal assistance

Indicators:

- Does the law provide for access to free legal assistance for the review of detention?
 Yes No
- Do asylum-seekers have effective access to free legal assistance in practice? Yes No

National law provides for legal aid within the context of Constitutional proceedings before the First Hall of the Civil Court or the Constitutional Court. However in practice it is almost impossible for detained asylum seekers to obtain access to this service and this for a number of reasons, including the way the system, which does not make any specific provision for detainees, works in practice, as well as the lack of information about the existence of this possibility and access it. If a detainee is represented by legal counsel then the lawyer may ask for permission to access the centre in order to communicate with his client.

Regulation 11(5) of the Common Standards and Procedures for Returning Illegally Staying Third Country Nationals Regulations provides that within the context of an application to the Board to review decisions related to return, a legal advisor shall be allowed to assist the third country national and free legal aid will be provided where the said individual meets the criteria for entitlement in terms of national law. It is however questionable whether an application to the Board to review the lawfulness of detention would qualify as a request to review a decision relating to return, which are usually understood to include a decision to issue a removal order and/or a return decision

In the case of the asylum procedure, while applicants may be represented by a lawyer at first instance, this is not available for free and they will have to bear all the costs involved. Free legal aid is however provided at the appeal stage of the asylum procedure. JRS Malta and aditus foundation (NGOs) are the only two organisations providing free legal services to detainees yet capacity is very much limited according to available resources.
