National Country Report

Bulgaria

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This report was written by Iliana Savova, Director, Refugee and Migrant Legal Programme, Bulgarian Helsinki Committee and was edited by ECRE.

The information is up-to-date as of 18 April 2014.

The AIDA project

The AIDA project is jointly coordinated by the European Council on Refugees and Exiles (ECRE), Forum Réfugiés-Cosi, Irish Refugee Council and the Hungarian Helsinki Committee. It aims to provide up-to date information on asylum practice in 14 EU Member States (AT, BE, BG, DE, FR, GR, HU, IE, IT, MT, NL, PL, SE, UK) which is easily accessible to the media, researchers, advocates, legal practitioners and the general public through the dedicated website www.asylumineurope.org. Furthermore the project seeks to promote the implementation and transposition of EU asylum legislation reflecting the highest possible standards of protection in line with international refugee and human rights law and based on best practice.

This report is part of the AIDA project (Asylum Information Database) funded by the European Programme for Integration and Migration (EPIM). Additional research for the second update of this report was developed with financial support from the Fundamental Rights and Citizenship Programme of the European Union (FRAME Project). The contents of the report are the sole responsibility of the Bulgarian Helsinki Committee and ECRE and can in no way be taken to reflect the views of the European Commission.

Overview of the of the main changes since the previous report update

The previous report update was published in November 2013.

Asylum Procedure

- In November 2013, 1,500 police were deployed to reinforce controls along the Bulgarian-Turkish border in the Elhovo region, causing a drastic decrease of new arrivals which thus raised concerns and allegations on push-backs policy and practices.
- The practice of criminal convictions for irregular entry in violation of Article 33 of the 1951 Convention was reverted; during the period January-February 2014, only 27 individuals were convicted of using false documents (crime which is not de-penalized), while none was convicted on accounts of irregular entry.
- Registration and documentation (provision of registration cards) of asylum seekers who arrived in large numbers in autumn of 2013 have been streamlined to a great extent; however there are still cases where the registration of asylum seekers –those who live in urban areas outside reception centers- is unduly delayed and repeatedly re-scheduled.
- The law was changed to distribute the competence for handling court appeals on first instance decisions in the regular procedure from the Administrative court of Sofia to all regional administrative courts, designated as per the residence of the asylum seeker who submits the appeal.

Reception Conditions

- Seeking for a release from detention, where they had been referred to by the Border Police, many asylum seekers submitted formal waivers from their right to accommodation in reception centers and from the related social assistance, declaring false domiciles (so called “external addresses”), which were largely accepted by the State Agency for Refugees (SAR) in violation of the law . As of 31 March 2014, according to the official statistics, 3,358 asylum seekers reside at external addresses at their own expenses.
- As of 27 March 2014, the capacity of the seven SAR centres (reception and registration centres – Banya, Ovcha Kupel and Harmanli, Transit centre Pastrogor, reception shelters of Voenna Rampa, Vrazhdebna and Kovachevtsi) reached 4,150 spaces with an 82% occupancy rate. SAR expects to reach a capacity of 6,000 places by the end of April 2014.
- Conditions observed in the centres have improved considerably in comparison with the situation observed in December 2013, particularly in the facility of Harmanli which currently accommodates more than 1,000 people. Harmanli no longer operates under a closed regime. Since 2 February 2014, in all reception facilities food is provided by the government (two hot meals per day).
- Asylum-seekers have access to primary medical care services, interpretation services for the registration of the asylum claim and the asylum process, heating, separate facilities for single men and women and a monthly assistance of 65 BGN (33 euros). However, delays occur in cash payments, due mainly to the fact that the amount of money required was not secured in the national budget and has to be allocated on an ad hoc basis each month.
- Banya RRC has been designated as a centre for unaccompanied children, who nevertheless still lack effective guardianship or representation. However, the draft law amendments currently discussed provide for institutional arrangements that could finally and effectively solve this long standing protection problem, if adopted.
- Since the previous National Programme for Integration of Refugees (NPIR) ended in December 2013, there is currently no integration programme in place. Therefore, newly recognised refugees or subsidiary protection holders (humanitarian status) do not receive any initial integration support. The government announced to be working towards the establishment of a new integration programme involving local municipalities. However, no progress has so far been made in this respect.

Detention of Asylum Seekers

- Asylum-seekers who applied at the border have by law to be transferred within 24 hours from the Border Police to SAR reception facilities. In practice, since October 2013 asylum-seekers are transferred to the newly established Elhovo Detention Centre, a triage centre, where they spend between three to seven days on average before being transferred to any of the SAR reception facilities.
- Average detention duration for those who applied from pre-removal detention centers increased to 45 days approximately in 2013; in Lubimets detention center almost 50 asylum seekers from the Maghreb Region of Africa have been waiting for their release and registration for more than 6 months.

Transposition of the EU asylum acquis

- Draft amendments introduced by the Parliament in October 2013 were largely advertised to be transposing the recast Qualification Directive and Reception Conditions Directive. However, neither of them is being fully transposed, in particular the Reception Conditions Directive which is reflected in the draft only with regard to Articles 8 -11 relating the detention of asylum seekers.

- During the draft amendments briefing before the Parliamentary Human Rights Commission the government announced that immediately after the adoption of the current draft law it will establish a working group to prepare the transposition of the recast Asylum Procedure Directive and the remaining provision of recast Qualification and Reception Conditions Directives.

5. Short overview of the asylum procedure

An asylum application may be lodged either before the specialised asylum administration, the State Agency for Refugees (SAR), or before any other administration, which will be obligated to refer it immediately to the SAR. Thus, asylum can be claimed on the territory, at borders (before the Border Police staff) or in detention centres (before the Migration Directorate staff). The asylum application should be made within a reasonable time after entering the country, except in case of irregular entry/residence when it is ought to be made immediately, otherwise it could be ruled out as inadmissible. If the asylum application was made before an administration, different than the SAR, status determination procedures could not legally start until the asylum seeker was transferred from the border/detention centre to any of the SAR's premises for the so called 'personal' registration.

Asylum applications in Bulgaria are examined in 3 stages: the Dublin procedure (whether the asylum application will be examined by Bulgaria or another EU member state), an accelerated procedure (combined examination on both admissibility and manifestly unfounded grounds) and a regular procedure (status determination on the merits of the application). If the asylum application is rejected at a former phase, the latter is inapplicable unless the rejection is revoked by a court. The decision-maker, the SAR, is a single central administrative authority, which has the rank of a ministry, but whose budget is assigned through the Ministry of Interior. SAR is competent to decide on all individual asylum applications and to grant/reject refugee or subsidiary protection (humanitarian) status. In case of a mass influx where individual asylum applications cannot be processed, a temporary protection status is granted by the government by a collective decision.

The Dublin procedure is not applicable to subsequent asylum applications. If the asylum application of an applicant returned to Bulgaria was already decided on its merits by a final negative decision, the applicant is re-admitted to the country, but then treated as an irregular migrant. Criteria, rules and deadlines of the Dublin Regulation are applied directly without transposition into national legislation.

The first instance procedure starts mandatorily with an accelerated procedure. However, the latter is not applicable to unaccompanied children, who after a decision has been taken that Bulgaria is the State responsible for examining their asylum application are admitted directly to determination on the substance in the regular procedure. Notwithstanding its name, the accelerated procedure combines the examination of both admissibility and manifestly unfounded grounds. The examination can result in finding the asylum application inadmissible, if the applicant is granted protection or permanent residence permit in another EU Member state or safe third country, or, if it concerns a a subsequent asylum application without any new facts or evidence being submitted. The asylum application can be found manifestly unfounded, if the applicant did not state any grounds of persecution at all, or, if their statements were unspecified, implausible or highly unlikely. The decision within an accelerated procedure should be issued in 3 days from its registration, otherwise the application is automatically transferred for status determination in a regular procedure on the merits. However, the law requires the State Agency for National Security (SANS) to provide an opinion in every asylum application, the examination of which as a result of the Dublin procedure was determined to be the responsibility of Bulgaria. If such opinion has not been provided, a decision can be issued neither in the accelerated, nor in the regular procedure. Therefore, in practice the 3 days deadline of the accelerated procedure is rarely observed and the majority of the asylum applications are automatically transferred for determination in the regular procedure. Hence, in practice the accelerated procedure is applied only with regard to subsequent applications, where the opinion of the SANS has been already collected during the first examination of the claim. The regular procedure (labelled under the law as a 'general' procedure) requires detailed examination of the asylum application on its merits. The regular procedure is a single procedure as far as the asylum application is decided upon both with regard to the need of international protection and the type of protection that should be granted - refugee status or subsidiary protection (humanitarian) status. The decision should be issued in 4 months from the registration of the asylum application but this deadline is indicative not mandatory. Therefore, this deadline is rarely observed by the SAR and asylum procedures in most cases take much longer than 4 months.

The appeal procedure mirrors the phases of the administrative stage of status determination, namely: (1) an appeal procedure against Dublin decisions, heard by the Administrative Court in Sofia only; (2) an appeal procedure against the decisions rejecting asylum applications as inadmissible or manifestly unfounded, heard by the administrative court from the relevant district where the appellant is residing and (3) an appeal procedure against decisions rejecting the asylum application on its merits, heard on two court instances by the regional administrative court as per the territorial unit of the SAR, where the asylum seeker is residing (1st instance) and the Supreme administrative court (2nd instance). All appeals have suspensive effect, except in Dublin cases unless the Dublin appellant asked the court explicitly to suspend the transfer to the other EU Member State concerned. Legal aid can be granted by the court, if requested. The time limit for lodging an appeal against a first instance decision of the SAR is 14 calendar days as of the notification of the decision in the regular procedure, 7 calendar days in the accelerated and Dublin procedure.

All courts in all types of appeal procedures can revoke entirely the appealed administrative decisions and give mandatory instructions as to how the case must be decided at the first instance by the SAR. The court cannot itself grant protection, but can instruct the administration to do so. If an administrative decision issued in an accelerated procedure was reverted by a court, the SAR has to re-consider the asylum application in 3 days after the judgement was served. If the reverted decision was made in a general procedure, the re-consideration should not take longer than 14 days after the judgement. However, the courts do not have powers to sanction the SAR, if their instructions were not observed while reverted asylum applications were re-considered. They can only proclaim the re-issued decision that ignores the instructions of the Court as null and void (in a new appeal procedure). Additionally, the court has the right to review and revoke two other types of administrative decisions: the rejection of a request to be accommodated in a transit/reception asylum centre and the rejection of requests for family reunification permits. The former type of decisions is subjected to the control of the administrative court in the district where the respective asylum seeker resides or has stated residence. –The rejection of a request for family reunification can be appealed and revised on two court instances by the regional administrative court as per the territorial unit of the SAR, where the asylum seeker is residing (as 1st instance) and the Supreme administrative court (as 2nd instance).

Ever since the establishment of the national asylum system in Bulgaria, asylum seekers have enjoyed liberty and freedom of movement. However, at the end of 2013 the government pushed for draft amendments of the law, which if adopted will allow for the detention and other limitations of the freedom in violation of the law¹². During the period September - December 2013 these asylum seekers living outside the reception centres in urban areas have been served with appointments for registration with a significant delay, in many cases - up to 6 months¹³. As of 15 March 2014 according to the official statistics¹⁴ 3,874 asylum seekers reside at external addresses at their own expense. On account of the submitted waivers none of them may request social assistance or financial support from the SAR. Among them there are still individuals who are not registered and documented as asylum seekers¹⁵, although they are very few indeed at the time of writing.

On 14 October 2013, due to the sudden influx of mixed migration flows, Bulgaria requested the European Asylum Support Office (EASO) for support to improve and enhance its asylum and reception system in order to cope with the situation. An Operating Plan for support and deployment of EASO Asylum Support Teams (AST) and the provision of technical and operational assistance to Bulgaria was signed on 17 October 2013. In a report from March 2014, the EASO recommended¹⁶ short-, mid-, and long-term measures vis-a-vis the improvement of the national asylum registration procedure, such as appointing personnel backup and training for emergency situations; Dublin interviews implemented during the registration of the applicants and therefore, suggestion to use only one registration form instead of two similar forms; Video-Conference-Systems available in all reception centres in case of need for interpretation of non-available languages (already existing in the main three reception and registration centres); improving data sharing and comparison among different responsible stakeholders in the migration chain, without prejudice to data protection rules.

In autumn of 2013 Bulgaria announced the construction of a 170 km long fence along a section of the Turkish border, due to be completed by the end of February 2014, aiming at preventing refugees from entering the territory through unofficial border crossings. By the end of March 2014 the construction of the fence has not yet started. Meanwhile this section of the border, known as the 'green border', has been closed by deploying over 1500 additional Bulgarian policemen to patrol the border. According to Novinite,¹⁷ the guards apprehended migrants attempting to reach Bulgaria and arrange for the Turkish authorities to take them back. It immediately resulted in a drastic decrease in the number of new arrivals at borders from several hundred a week for the period August - November 2013 to 138 individuals in December 2013¹⁸. Such a drastic decrease cannot be explained otherwise than through push-backs being applied at large scale. The government announced that the measures aimed at prevention of irregular entry were not targetted towards asylum seekers, who would be allowed to claim asylum at the official border checkpoints. However, during 2013 only 375 individuals¹⁹ were registered as asylum seekers at the official border checkpoints, which indicates that despite such announcement, the registration of asylum seekers at the border checkpoints was avoided by the Border Police in practice with most likely push-backs taking place. Between 1 January and 31 March 2014, 376 third country nationals were apprehended for irregular entry through the 'green' border as well as 86 at official border crossings at the Bulgarian-Turkish Border. A total of 255 were reported to have applied for international protection in this period by the Border Police²⁰

In the beginning of September 2013, when the increase of asylum seekers hit the media, the Chief Prosecutor announced²¹ that his office was sending on a mission to Svilengrad additional prosecutors in order to reinforce the criminal prosecution against asylum seekers on account of their irregular entry. Human rights NGOs and the professional organisations of the judiciary immediately advocated against this approach as contradictory to Article 31 of 1951 Geneva Convention²². On 18 October 2013 Bulgarian Judges Union and the National Association of Prosecutors organised a seminar on Article 31 non-punishment principle attended by representatives of all relevant courts and prosecutor's offices from Svilengrad, Elhovo, Yambol, Malko Tarnovo and Haskovo²³. As a result the Bulgarian Judges Union and the Association of Prosecutors upheld the position that Article 31 non-punishment principle should be fully respected and asylum seekers, who entered irregularly the territory of the country, should not be convicted. Following this position of the Guild, in November 2013 only 11 asylum seekers were convicted, while 14 were convicted in December 2013. From 1 January - 25 March 2014 criminal convictions against asylum seekers who claimed asylum before the Border Police were issued only with respect to crimes different from irregular entry such as use of falsified documents or other, which were not depenalised.²⁴

2. Regular procedure

General (scope, time limits)

Indicators:

- Time limit set in law for the determining authority to make a decision on the asylum application at first instance (in months): 3
- Are detailed reasons for the rejection at first instance of an asylum application shared with the applicant in writing? Yes No
- As of 31st December 2012, the number of cases for which no final decision (including at first appeal) was taken one year after the asylum application was registered Not available

The national authority, competent to take decisions on asylum applications at first instance - the State Agency for Refugees (SAR) - is an administration with a rank of a Ministry, responsible directly to the government alone. However, as far as its budget is allocated through the Ministry of Interior, in practice the SAR is dependent from the decisions of the MOI when making requests for additional or emergency funding. The SAR's only competence is to decide on individual applications for international protection by recognising or refusing refugee status, or, granting or refusing humanitarian status (subsidiary protection). SAR also has an advisory role to the government when it decides whether to apply temporary protection on a group basis in cases of a mass influx of asylum seekers who flee from a war like situation, gross abuse of human rights or indiscriminate violence.

The Law on Asylum and Refugees (LAR) sets a 3 month time-limit²⁵ for deciding on an asylum application, which has been admitted to a regular procedure. The LAR requires that within 2 months from the beginning of the regular procedure at least one eligibility interview is conducted with the asylum seeker to allow the interviewer to draft a proposal for a decision on the asylum application concerned. The asylum application should firstly be assessed on its eligibility for refugee status. If the answer is negative, the need for subsidiary protection on account of a general risk to the applicant's human rights should be also considered and decided upon. The interviewer's position is reported to the decision-maker, who has another month for consideration and decision. If evidence is insufficient for taking a decision the law allows for the 3 months deadline to be extended for another 3 months at most, thus providing the SAR with a possibility to take 6 months in total to decide in the regular procedure.

However, all deadlines are not mandatory, but only indicative. Therefore if these deadlines are exceeded, this does not affect the validity of the decision. In practice, the asylum procedure usually lasts between 4 to 6 months approximately, but in some cases it can last up to 12 months. The latter happens not only in serious individual cases with complex grounds and criteria involved, but also in prima facie cases of applicants coming from countries of origin in a situation of war or indiscriminate violence - when the government tends to re-shape, i.e. adopt a more restrictive asylum policy towards the country in question. Moreover, as a result of the high influx in the autumn of 2013, the determination deadlines as set in the law were respected even less. In its March 2014 report, the EASO noted that the SANS security checks (See above, Asylum Procedure, A. General, 5. Short overview of the asylum procedure) and the organisation of the complex decision-making process (Dublin, accelerated and regular procedure) constitute a serious obstacle to speed up the overall asylum procedure and to ensure maximum productivity²⁶.

If the decision is negative, the appeal and court proceedings can add up to 12 more months in case the decisions in the regular procedure are reviewed by the courts on 2 instances. If the court finally reverts the first instance decision, the determining authority SAR has 14 days to issue a new decision, complying with the court's instructions on the application of the law. However, during the last 4 years, not only did the decision-maker not respect this 14 days deadline, but in the majority of the cases the SAR once again rejected the asylum application concerned despite the court's instructions. As a result, including repeated appeal procedures against the second negative decision, the asylum procedure can extend over 2 years. In attempt to reduce the workload of the Administrative court of Sofia city, previously responsible for handling all Dublin appeals as well as all appeals in the regular procedure as the first instance of appeal, the law was changed²⁷ to distribute the competence for the latter among all regional administrative courts, designated as per the residence of the asylum seekers, who submit the appeal.

Appeal

Indicators:

- Does the law provide for an appeal against the first instance decision in the regular procedure:
 - Yes No
 - o if yes, is the appeal judicial administrative
 - o If yes, is it suspensive Yes No
- Average processing time for the appeal body to make a decision: 12 months

The negative decision taken in the regular procedure on the substance (merits) of the asylum application can be appealed within 14 days from its notification. In general, this time-limit proved sufficient for rejected asylum seekers to get legal advice, prepare and submit the appeal within the deadline. The decision-maker (SAR) is obligated to, and actually does, provide information to rejected asylum seekers as to where and how they can receive legal aid (see below, Legal assistance) when serving a negative decision. The law establishes two appeal instances in the regular procedure²⁸ - in contrast to appeal procedures for contesting decisions taken in Dublin and accelerated procedures, where first instance decisions are reviewed in only one appeal instance²⁹. Appeal procedures are only judicial; the law does not envisage an administrative review of asylum determination decisions, at all. Both appeals before the 1st and 2nd appeal courts have suspensive effect. The first appeal is held before the regional administrative court, where the respondent party (the decision-maker, SAR) has its territorial unit and where the appellant (the person lodging the appeal) resides³⁰. The first appeal instance conducts a full review of the case, both on the facts and the points of law. Asylum seekers are summoned and questioned in a public hearing as to the reasons they applied for asylum. Decisions are published, but also served personally to the appellant. If the first instance appeal decision is negative, the asylum seekers can bring their case to the second (final) appeal court, the Supreme administrative court, 3rd Department, but only with regard to points of law. Both appeal courts have to issue their decisions within one month. However this deadline is indicative, not mandatory and therefore regularly not respected. Average duration of an appeal procedure before the court at both judicial instances is 12 months, although in more complex cases it can last up to 18 months.

Personal Interview

Indicators:

- Is a personal interview of the asylum seeker conducted in most cases in practice in the regular procedure? Yes No
- If so, are interpreters available in practice, for interviews? Yes No
- In the regular procedure, is the interview conducted by the authority responsible for taking the decision? Yes No
- Are interviews conducted through video conferencing? Frequently Rarely Never

The law requires³¹ that asylum seekers, whose applications were admitted to the regular procedure, should be interviewed at least once with regard to the facts and circumstances of their applications. Decisions cannot be considered in accordance with the law, if the interview was omitted, unless it concerns a medically established case of insanity or other mental disorder. In practice, all asylum seekers are interviewed at least once in order to determine their eligibility for refugee or humanitarian (subsidiary protection) status. Second or more interviews are usually conducted only if there are contradictions in the statements or if some facts need to be clarified.

Presence of an interpreter ensuring interpretation into a language that the asylum seeker understands is mandatory according to the national legislation. The law provides for a gender sensitive approach as interviews can be conducted by an interviewer and interpreter of the same sex as the asylum seeker interviewed, upon their request. In practice, all asylum seekers are indeed asked explicitly whether they would like to have an interviewer or interpreter of the same sex in the beginning of each interview. Interpreters from key languages such as Arabic, Dari, Farsi, Pashto, Urdu, Kurdish, English, French and Russian are available. Problems to provide interpretation in practice arise in cases of rare languages such as Tamil and Somali. In these cases videoconference interpretation is used, however, due to financial constraints, interviewers are encouraged³² to convince asylum seekers to agree to be interviewed in another language spoken by the asylum seeker, even though their level of knowledge of this second language is poor or close to non-existent. Training of interpreters is provided, though this is sporadic rather than on a regular basis. Most of the interpreters used by the State Agency for Refugees (SAR) did agree on and signed the Interpreter's Code of Conduct adopted in 2009; however its rules are not followed strictly in practice. For example, quite often the statements are summarised or the interpreters provide comments on their authenticity or likelihood. Lawyers representing asylum seekers during the interviews reported that burnout is a serious problem not only among interviewers, but also among interpreters as often impatience and irritation is being demonstrated by both, which finally results in issues only being addressed vaguely or summarised interpretations³³.

All interviews are conducted by staff members of the SAR, whose competences include interviewing, case assessment and preparing a draft decision on the claim. Audio recording is possible and equipment is available in all interviewing rooms, however in practice the interviewers opt not to use it and systematically try quite hard to convince³⁴ asylum seekers that it is not necessary. As a result, audio recording has not been used in practice at all, despite the fact that UNHCR and NGOs repeatedly insisted on it as a solid safeguard against malpractice and corruption and despite the fact that the SAR included audio recording as a priority in its strategic objectives.³⁵ Therefore, almost all interviews are recorded in writing by the interviewers, many of them verbatim by typing questions/answers on a computer. In this way a proper interview report is created, printed immediately after the end of the interview, checked with the asylum seeker and corrected, if necessary. However, some of the interviewers continue to write down the interviews by hand and transcribe them at a later stage, which creates concerns about protocol's accuracy. It has to be noted that in practice most of the protocols, even if properly recorded are not read and interpreted to the asylum seeker, but simply presented for signing.

All asylum seekers arriving on Bulgarian territory are in practice interviewed, without excluding certain nationalities or caseloads. However, even before the autumn 2013 influx these interviews were conducted with immense delays between 4 to 16 weeks on average. Since the influx the timing and quality of interviewing further deteriorated. There was no pre-screening of the files; the files were distributed randomly to the caseworkers who, due to the workload, had no time to prepare the interviews. The caseworkers handled all type of requests, there was no specialisation and caseworkers were not supported by adequate country of origin information. Statistics until the end of October 2013 showed 5232 asylum claims. 2316 decisions were taken of which 23 asylum seekers were granted refugee status and 1250 asylum seekers were granted humanitarian protection. Out of the 5232 asylum claims, 2982 claimed to be of Syrian nationality. Syrian nationals proving their identity by original Syrian identity documents were almost automatically granted subsidiary protection (humanitarian status). The duration of the interview and the time needed take a decision in the regular asylum procedure were shortened for Syrian nationals by prioritizing their claims for international protection. However, non-Syrian nationals seem to becoming a neglected group due to the priority that has been given to the Syrian applicants and risk facing huge delays in the processing of their asylum applications³⁶.

Refugee Status Determination (RSD) monitoring, implemented by legal NGOs³⁷ in 2013 demonstrated that 90% of monitored asylum claims (500 cases) were stated before a government institution other than the State Agency for Refugees (SAR). However, only in 10% of these cases (51 cases) the supporting documents, collected by the relevant institution (Border or Migration police) were sent to the SAR in due time, if at all. In 77% of the monitored cases (433 cases) interviewers did not provide general information on determination procedures to asylum seekers. Evidence or proof, if any, which were submitted by asylum seekers were not duly put in writing in 30% of monitored cases (171 cases), which could result in such evidence not to be taken into consideration when applications were to be determined. In 13% of monitored cases (74 cases) the initial date of RSD procedure was delayed with more than 1 month from the date of the submission of the asylum claim before government agency (Border or Migration police) other than the SAR. Only in 10% of all monitored cases (56 cases) the interviews were tape-recorded as ultimate safeguard for a decision based on all facts and circumstances as stated by the asylum seeker. All interviews were recorded in writing by the interviewers, some by hand which created serious concerns about the accuracy of statement's description. Yet, in 75% of monitored cases (421 cases) the interviewer used "open" questions to allow the applicant to present their story in detail and in 69% of the cases (391 cases) asylum seekers were given an opportunity to clarify contradictions in statements, if such were observed. In practice, in 39% of the cases (222 cases) the protocol of the interview, even if properly recorded, were not read and interpreted to the asylum seeker, but simply presented and served for signing.

In 2013, the national Law on Legal Aid was amended³⁸ to introduce mandatory legal aid for asylum seekers at all stages of status determination procedure, sponsored under the state budget. In the law, the provision of legal aid to asylum seekers is subject to the condition that legal aid is not already provided on another basis. According to the amendment, asylum seekers have the right to ask for the appointment of a legal aid lawyer from the moment of the registration of their asylum application. Before the law was amended, state funded legal aid was only available to asylum seekers at the appeal stage before the Administrative Court or Supreme Court, according to the law on legal aid. However, the National Bureau for Legal Aid (NBLA), an institution with the Ministry of Justice designated to manage legal aid funding does not have any resources planned for legal aid to asylum seekers during status determination at first instance.³⁹ Therefore, with the assistance of Bulgarian Helsinki Committee the Bureau prepared and submitted a project under ERF 2013 Annual Programme, which was approved by the SAR⁴⁰. Legal aid, provided under ERF projects consists of legal advice and representation during eligibility interviews as well as assistance to appeal negative decisions before the court. Interpretation costs are also covered as a part of legal aid projects to facilitate the communication between lawyers and asylum seekers. Remuneration for both lawyers and interpreters is calculated in accordance with the generally applicable official rates for the respective professions. The provision of legal aid by the NBLA during the status determination procedure is expected to commence in April 2014.

Beyond the framework of the abovementioned ERF-project, under the law the legal aid at first instance is accessible to all asylum seekers, including those submitting a subsequent asylum application, if funds are available. However, as indicated, such funds are not available except for the ERF-project that was approved. Legal aid before the court at both judicial instances (regional administrative courts and Supreme administrative court) is funded under the State budget and is systematically granted to asylum seekers, unless the asylum application was a subsequent one without new evidence or facts involved. It has been criticised only with relation to the quality of the legal representation, which however is a general flaw of the legal aid system in Bulgaria.⁴¹

Procedure

Indicator:

- If another EU Member State accepts responsibility for the asylum applicant, how long does it take in practice (on average) before the applicant is transferred to the responsible Member State? 2 months (60 days) approximately EURODAC has been used as an instrument for checking the identity of all irregular migrants. Fingerprints taken by the border or immigration police are uploaded automatically in the SIS system and can be used for the purpose of implementing the Dublin Regulation. Nonetheless, all asylum seekers are systematically fingerprinted again by the Dublin Unit of the asylum authority (State Agency for Refugees - SAR) for technical reasons.

Under the law and in practice the Dublin procedure is applied systematically to all asylum applications, except in the case of subsequent applications.⁴² The law does not establish criteria to determine the state responsible, but simply refers to the criteria listed in the Dublin Regulation. Most common criteria applied in both taking charge and taking back cases are previously issued documents and the Member state where the asylum seeker first entered. Bulgaria accepts responsibility for examination of the asylum application based on the humanitarian clause and mostly vis-à-vis document and entry reasons.⁴³ The sovereignty clause in the Dublin Regulation is increasingly being used since 1 August 2011 when the government decided⁴⁴ to accept on the basis of this clause the responsibility for examining applications of all asylum seekers, who otherwise should be returned to Greece. The sovereignty clause is also used in few other cases in combination with the humanitarian clause, mainly for family reasons. In cases where another Member state accepts the responsibility to examine the application of an asylum seeker who is in Bulgaria, the transfer is implemented within 2 months on average.

Asylum seekers are usually not detained in practice upon the notification of the transfer. However in certain cases transferred asylum seekers can be detained up to 5 days prior the transfer itself as a precautionary measure to ensure their timely boarding on the plane. However, in all cases the transfer is carried out without an escort. It should be noted that in practice sometimes asylum seekers agree to be detained for a couple of days before the flight to the responsible Member State as this is the only way for them to avoid any procedural problems that can delay their exit.

Asylum seekers to be transferred under the Dublin Regulation to another Member State are given a written decision stating the grounds for applying the Dublin Regulation and the right to appeal the transfer to the other Member State before the court. However, asylum seekers are not informed of the fact that requests are made for taking back/taking charge to the Member State deemed responsible nor of any progress made with regard to such requests, unless the applicant themselves requested the transfer and/or provided due evidence in this respect.

Asylum seekers who are returned from other Member States in principle do not have any obstacles to access the asylum procedure in Bulgaria upon their return. However, if the status determination at the first instance has been already made in absentia and became final, asylum seekers are considered finally rejected and are detained upon arrival in deportation centres for irregular migrants.

In March 2014, the EASO report⁴⁵ noted that as of the end of 2013, only 14 caseworkers were responsible for the incoming asylum claims in Bulgaria. The caseworkers were conducting the Dublin interview, the accelerated procedure interview, the general procedure interview and drafted decisions. The date of the Dublin interview was determined by those responsible for registration at the SAR at the moment of registration (mostly a week to ten days after the registration). The caseworkers were not informed about these dates as they received the list of the interviews to be conducted the evening before or at the same day of the interview. The number of Dublin interviews varied from 5 to 10 or more a day. The reports of the Dublin interviews were hand written and added to the hardcopy file. A certain time was needed to process all the Dublin decisions at the SAR head office before handing back the file to the caseworker. In January 2014 the SAR hired in total 160 new staff members, comprising 54 experts (civil servants with analytical functions), 55 specialists (employment contract, supporting functions), eight legal advisers, four directors, three heads of units and further support staff. Due to increased administrative capacity and training of new staff, the situation in the RRCs in Sofia and Bania as well as in TC in Pastrogor remains under control and relatively stable at the moment. 35 newly recruited officers of three different profiles (registration officers, case officers, legal advisors mostly dealing with the Dublin Procedure) and coming from three different territorial units were trained by EASO in January 2014 and 24 newly recruited staff members are trained by EASO in the last week of February 2014. However, it should be noted that of the 160 newly hired staff in December 2013 only 50 are permanent and 110 have temporary contracts until the end of April 2014 funded by the EU.⁴⁶ In its latest observations on Bulgaria, UNHCR expressed its concerns on the sustainability of the improvements of the situation in Bulgaria, including because of the “potentially large number of pending Dublin transfers to Bulgaria”. According to UNHCR, as of 31 March 2014, 1,628 requests were pending before the Bulgarian State Agency for Refugees (SAR), including 614 “take back” requests and 819 “take charge” requests as well as 195 requests for information.⁴⁷

⁴⁷ ibidem

Appeals against decisions in the Dublin procedure are heard only before the Administrative court of Sofia and only at one instance. All other appeals against decisions rendered at first instance are heard before the respective administrative court located in the region where the asylum seeker is residing. Dublin appeals do not have a suspensive effect, but it can be awarded by the court upon an explicit request from the asylum seeker.

The time limit for lodging the appeal is 7 calendar days, which is equal to the time limit for appeal in the accelerated procedure. Appeal procedures are held in an open hearing, legal aid can also be awarded. Court accepts in practice all kind of evidence in support of the appeal, including on the level of reception conditions and procedural guarantees to substantiate its decision, which was the case for all Dublin transfers to Greece until they were discontinued under the sovereignty clause in 2011. The court practice however is quite poor as very few Dublin decisions on transfers to other Member States are challenged. That is why no clear conclusions can be made whether national courts take in principle into account the reception conditions, procedural guarantees and recognition rates in the responsible Member state when reviewing the Dublin decision.

Personal Interview

Indicators:

- Is a personal interview of the asylum seeker conducted in most cases in practice in the Dublin procedure? Yes No
- If so, are interpreters available in practice, for interviews? Yes No
- Are interviews conducted through video conferencing? Frequently Rarely Never

The law⁴⁸ does not require the organisation of a personal interview in the Dublin procedure, rather it gives an opportunity to the interviewer to decide whether the interview is necessary or not in light of all other related circumstances and evidence. If an interview is conducted it is not different than any other eligibility interviews in the asylum procedure except relating to the type of questions asked in order to verify and apply the Dublin criteria. Similar to the regular procedure, an audio recording is possible and equipment is available in all interviewing rooms. However, in practice, the interviewers opt not to use it and systematically try to convince asylum seekers that it is not necessary. As a result, the audio recording has not been used in practice in Dublin procedures either. Prior the influx in autumn 2013, the decision-maker in State Agency for Refugees (SAR) conducted Dublin interviews in all cases, not only when it was established from other statements (during the registration) or already collected evidence (e.g. documents, tickets, visas, EURODAC hits) that it was likely that another Member State would be responsible for the examination of the asylum application. The Dublin interview template repeats many of the questions and queries already listed in the registration form as it focuses on entry routes, previous visits or residence in other Member States or establishment of family members in these states. This approach however proved inadequate in a situation of growing number of new arrivals. In practice it takes one-month on average to organise a Dublin interview, which may lead to further delays in the asylum procedure in a situation of an increased influx. Additional problems are created by the fact that the decision-making process remains multi-staged and centralized as far as the Dublin decisions are concerned as such decisions can be issued only by the SAR's Dublin Unit, which is in the headquarters of the SAR in Sofia⁴⁹. Therefore, the EASO mission in Bulgaria recommended that Dublin interviews should be combined with the registration of the asylum seekers; thus use only one form instead of two similar forms; as well as competences to issue Dublin decisions to be delegated or distributed from SAR Dublin Unit to the local staff at the reception/transit centres around the country.

⁴⁹ EASO, Stock taking report on the asylum situation in Bulgaria, March 2014, 3.2. Asylum Determination Procedure.

There are no guidelines or a code of conduct for asylum officers, elaborating on the manner interviews should be conducted. There are currently no gender sensitive mechanisms in place in relation to the conduct of interviews, except the asylum seekers' right⁵⁰ to ask for an interpreter from the same gender.

The SAR does not exclude any caseloads or nationalities from interviews.

There have been so far no complaints about the quality of transcripts of interviews.

Legal assistance

Indicators:

- Do asylum seekers have access to free legal assistance in the appeal procedure against a Dublin decision? Yes always/with difficulty No

Amendments of the national law (Law on Legal Aid⁵¹) now provide for state funded representation in procedures before the administration. As a result, legal aid financed by the State budget became available to asylum seekers during the Dublin procedure in 2013, additionally to already available legal aid during an appeal procedure before the court. In practice however due to financial constraints and deficiencies, the legal aid during the Dublin procedure is highly dependent on the available ERF funding and projects (see section regular procedure, legal assistance).

The same conditions and the same problems as for legal aid provided during the regular procedure apply to legal aid provided during the Dublin procedure..

Suspension of transfers

Indicator:

- Are Dublin transfers systematically suspended as a matter of policy or as a matter of jurisprudence to one or more countries? Yes No
 - o If yes, to which country/countries? Greece

Bulgaria suspended all Dublin transfers to Greece in 2011, thereby assuming responsibility for examining the asylum applications of the asylum seekers concerned. The suspension of Dublin transfers to Greece was decided by the State Agency for Refugees (SAR)⁵² as a matter of overall policy and was based on the UNHCR's position related to the matter. As a result, all asylum seekers who otherwise should be returned to Greece on the basis of the Dublin Regulation were admitted to the next stages of the status determination procedure (accelerated and, after, regular procedure) with full access to all available rights and entitlements. This policy is presently applied in practice since 1st August 2011 but it has been reported that for some months after the M.S.S. v Belgium and Greece judgment of the European Court of Human Rights, until August 2011 Dublin transfers to Greece were still carried out.⁵³

Suspensions of transfers are not automatic, as there might be cases of “take charge”, where applicants have family members in other EU Member States, or other circumstances that engage the responsibility of another state. Due to the level of material reception conditions in Bulgaria, there have been any appeals against Dublin transfer decisions to any other EU Member State.

On 2 January 2014 the UNHCR issued a paper⁵⁴ that assesses the prevailing reception conditions and asylum procedures in Bulgaria, including the situation for people transferred to Bulgaria under the Dublin Regulation. The paper alerted that with the exponential rise in the numbers of the new arrivals in Bulgaria since the autumn of 2013, the previously existing gaps in the national asylum system have worsened with serious impact on affected asylum seekers. UNHCR concluded that asylum-seekers in Bulgaria face a real risk of inhuman or degrading treatment, due to systemic deficiencies in both the reception conditions and asylum procedures and urged other EU member-states to halt all transfers of asylum seekers to Bulgaria pursuant the Recast Dublin Regulation where it applied. On 15 April 2014, UNHCR lifted its call for all Dublin transfers to Bulgaria to be suspended in light of the improvements in the asylum system and reception conditions that were achieved with the support of UNHCR, EASO and non-governmental stakeholders. Nevertheless, it continued to raise concerns with respect to access to the territory, inadequate reception conditions in two of the centres; the lack of systematic identification of vulnerable asylum seekers (and in particular (unaccompanied) children) and of a system to respond to their needs; the quality of decisions on asylum applications and procedures, and the absence of an integration programme for those who have been granted a protection status. UNHCR expressed particular concern that “in the absence of a solid strategy and sustainable programme to ensure access to livelihoods, affordable housing, language acquisition and effective access to formal education for children, beneficiaries of international protection may not have effective access to self-reliance opportunities and thus may be at risk of poverty and homelessness”.⁵⁵ UNHCR therefore acknowledged that, despite the improvements, there may be reasons that preclude transfer to Bulgaria under the Dublin Regulation “for certain groups or individuals”. In particular, UNHCR recommends particular vigilance with respect to the transfer of asylum seekers with specific needs and vulnerabilities. It also remains concerned over the sustainability and the consolidation of the efforts undertaken in the medium and longer-term.

Both ECRE and Amnesty International called for the continued suspension of transfers of asylum seekers to Bulgaria in light of the fact that inadequate conditions in parts of the reception system and deficiencies in the asylum procedure continue to remain, while also the sustainability of improvements to the asylum system in Bulgaria in the longer term is questionable.⁵⁶

4. Admissibility procedures

General (scope, criteria, time limits)

National legislation provides for a combined initial examination of the asylum application on both admissibility and manifestly unfounded grounds, which is to be distinguished from the regular procedure, where the examination is focused on the merits of the asylum application. The initial examination can result in finding the asylum application inadmissible, if the applicant is already granted protection in another EU state or safe third country,⁵⁷ or if the application is a subsequent asylum application without any new facts or evidence submitted.⁵⁸ The first ground is rarely applied due to lack of such hypotheses, but inadmissibility is systematically ruled out in practice on subsequent applications. However, during the initial examination the asylum application could be found admissible, but manifestly unfounded, if the applicant did not state any grounds for persecution at all, or, if their statements were unspecified, implausible or highly unlikely. This combined initial stage of the examination of the asylum application is according to the law considered as an "accelerated procedure". Therefore all issues related to the admissibility assessment are discussed in section 6 on the accelerated procedure.

Personal Interview

As described above in the section personal interview under regular procedures.

Legal assistance

5. Border procedure (border and transit zones)

There is no border procedure in Bulgaria.

6. Accelerated procedures

General (scope, grounds for accelerated procedures, time limits)

The accelerated procedure is designed to examine the admissibility of the asylum application, but also the likelihood of the application being fraudulent or manifestly unfounded.⁵⁹ The examination can result in finding the asylum application inadmissible, in case the applicant is already granted protection or a permanent residence permit in another EU state or safe third country, or, if it concerns a subsequent asylum application without any new facts or evidence being submitted. The asylum application can also be found manifestly unfounded, if the applicant did not state any reasons for applying for asylum related to grounds of persecution at all, or, if their statements were unspecified, implausible or highly unlikely. All grounds are applied in practice. The decision within an accelerated procedure should be issued within 3 days from the decision that Bulgaria is responsible to examine the asylum application concerned.⁶⁰ If the decision is not taken within this timeframe, the asylum application is automatically transferred for examination on the merits under the regular procedure. However, the law requires the State Agency for National Security (SANS) to provide an opinion as to whether the person concerned constitutes a threat to national security in every asylum application, which as a result of the Dublin procedure was determined to be of the responsibility of Bulgaria. If such opinion has not been provided no decision can be issued neither in accelerated, nor in the regular procedure. Therefore, in practice the 3 days deadline of the accelerated procedure is rarely observed and the majority of the asylum applications are automatically transferred for determination in the regular procedure. Hence, in practice the accelerated procedure is applied only with regard to subsequent applications, where the opinion of the SANS has been already collected during the first examination of the claim. In 2010 the Bulgarian Helsinki Committee, a legal NGO, communicated to the SAR a suggestion to amend the law⁶¹ and remove the security checks from all stages of the status determination procedure, prior to the regular procedure because, even if established, any circumstances relating to a national security threat can be taken into account as an exclusion ground only if the inclusion clauses have been met in the particular case and such assessment can be done only in the regular procedure and not earlier than that. A similar recommendation was also made by the EASO in its 2014 mission report on Bulgaria.⁶²

The authority responsible for taking decisions at first instance on asylum applications in the accelerated procedure is the State Agency for Refugees (SAR), through caseworkers specially appointed for taking decisions in this procedure. In practice all asylum applications are channelled first through the accelerated procedure as a mandatory phase of the status determination, except the claims of separated children, unaccompanied children or adolescent asylum seekers who are explicitly exempt from the accelerated procedure under the law⁶³ and have immediate access to an in-depth assessment of the substance of their asylum application in the regular procedure.

Appeal

Indicators:

- Does the law provide for an appeal against a decision taken in an accelerated procedure?
 - Yes No
 - o if yes, is the appeal: judicial administrative
 - o If yes, is it suspensive? Yes No

Appeals in the accelerated procedure have to be submitted within 7 calendar days (excluding public holidays) after notification of the negative decision, as opposed to the 14 calendar days deadline in the regular procedure. Another major difference with the regular asylum procedure is related to the number of judicial appeal instances. In the accelerated procedure there is only one judicial appeal possible, whereas in the regular procedure there are two appeal instances (a 1st instance appeal to the Court competent to review both to facts and legality of the first instance decision and an onward appeal in which only points of law are considered).

Lodging an appeal has automatic suspensive effect vis-à-vis removal of the asylum seeker. The court competent to revise first instance decisions in the accelerated procedure is the administrative court of the county in which the appellant resides. The court has the obligation to ascertain whether the assessment of the admissibility or the manifestly unfounded character of the claim is correct in view of the facts, evidence and legal provisions applicable. Asylum seekers have to be summoned for a public hearing and in practice are asked to shortly summarise their reasons for fleeing their country of origin and seek protection elsewhere.

In general, asylum seekers do not face significant obstacles to lodge an appeal in the accelerated asylum procedure within the 7 day deadline. However, national legal aid arrangements only provide for state funded legal assistance and representation after a court case has been initiated, i.e. after the appeal has been drafted and lodged. As a result, asylum seekers rely entirely on NGOs for their access to the court, i.e. for drafting and lodging the appeal. Presently, only one NGO provides this type of assistance independently from ERF funding.

Personal Interview

As described above in the section legal assistance under regular procedures. The questions asked during interviews in the accelerated procedure aimed at establishment of facts relate the individual refugee story, although in less detail in comparison with the interviews conducted within the regular procedure. Facts, such as travel routes, identity and nationality are in principle exhaustively addressed prior the accelerated procedure at the stages of registration and/or the Dublin procedure.

C. Information for asylum seekers and access to NGOs and UNHCR

Indicators:

- Is sufficient information provided to asylum seekers on the procedures in practice? Yes not always/with difficulty No
- Is sufficient information provided to asylum seekers on their rights and obligations in practice? Yes not always/with difficulty No
- Do asylum seekers located at the border have effective access to NGOs and UNHCR if they wish so in practice? Yes not always/with difficulty No
- Do asylum seekers in detention centres have effective access to NGOs and UNHCR if they wish so in practice? Yes not always/with difficulty No
- Do asylum seekers accommodated in remote locations on the territory (excluding borders) have effective access to NGOs and UNHCR if they wish so in practice? Yes not always/with difficulty No

The law⁶⁴ explicitly mentions the obligation of the asylum administration to provide information to asylum seekers within 15 days from the submission of the application. The common leaflet and the specific leaflet for UAMs drafted by the Commission as part of the Dublin Implementing Regulation⁶⁵ are not being used in Bulgaria and provided to asylum seekers. The information should cover both rights and obligations of asylum seekers and the procedures that will follow. Information on existing organisations that provide social and legal assistance has to be given as well. The information has to be provided in a language the asylum seeker declared that he understands or, when it is impossible – in a language the asylum seeker may be reasonably supposed to understand. The law does not specify whether the information should be provided orally or in writing, but in practice the information is always provided to asylum seekers in writing in the form of a leaflet translated in the languages spoken by the main nationalities seeking asylum in Bulgaria, such as Arabic, Farsi, Dari, Urdu, Pashtoo, Kurdish, English and French.

Information by leaflets - or where needed in another way (UNHCR or NGOs info boards) - is usually provided by the SAR from the initial application (e.g. at the border) until the registration process is finished⁶⁶. However, leaflets are quite long and the explanations are deemed by most of the asylum seekers to be complex and difficult to understand. NGOs, in particular UNHCR's implementing partners, develop and distribute other leaflets that are simpler and easier to read and some do operate reception desks where this kind of information is also provided orally to the asylum seekers. In addition, all European Refugee Fund projects for legal aid so far included the provision of oral legal consultations on the rights, obligations and procedures pending each type of the status determination procedure at the first instance. The most pressing problems in practice related to this approach are the time gaps in between the different projects which sometimes can last for months, during which period the consultations are not available for asylum seekers. As from 2014 the provision of legal consultations/information will be done not only by NGOs, but also by legal aid lawyers from the National Bureau for Legal Aid (see, B. Procedures, 2. Regular Procedure, Legal assistance), also funded under ERF. There is a need to update the information in the present leaflets, distributed by the SAR in order to provide sound and clear information to asylum seekers not only about the status determination procedure and their rights during the procedure, but on which of the various actors they can turn to in order to receive clarification, further counselling and/or assistance relating to different aspects of their situation that may concern them.

As mentioned under the section “Registration of the asylum application” registration of asylum applications is seriously delayed. Moreover, SAR does not meet its obligation⁶⁷ to provide, in a language comprehensible to the applicant, within fifteen days from the date of the submission of the asylum application, information as to the terms and procedures to be applied and their rights and obligations in the procedures, as well as organisations providing legal and social assistance. This is breach of Bulgaria’s obligations under Article 5 of the 2003 EU Reception Conditions Directive, which have been slightly strengthened in Article 5 of recast Directive 2013/33/EU, which needs to be transposed by Member States at the latest by 20 July 2015. This situation worsened after the 2013 influx. For several months until February 2014 the information, including legal information with regard to rights, obligations and procedures, was provided to asylum seekers by NGOs and UNHCR. BHC together with UNHCR also distributed leaflets and boards with information specifically adapted to the particular emergency situation, e.g. types of procedures to follow, rights and obligations, lack of accommodation, delays in registration and identification, etc. This information was provided in English, French, Arabic, Farsi/Dari and Kurdish.

Among all types of different status determination procedures, the Dublin procedure proved to be the most difficult for asylum seekers to comprehend despite the considerable amount of written materials produced in practice to inform them about it. Another difficult issue is detention and the reasons why a person who applied for asylum can remain detained without a transparent and fixed maximum period of detention. NGOs, lawyers and UNHCR staff have unhindered access⁶⁸ to all border and inland detention centres and try to provide as much information as possible related to detention grounds and conditions. Despite that, the subject of detention remains hard to explain as an extremely high percentage of asylum seekers claim that they do not understand reasons why they are kept in detention in principle as all other irregular migrants⁶⁹

D. Subsequent applications

Indicators:

- Does the legislation provide for a specific procedure for subsequent applications?
 Yes No
- Is a removal order suspended during the examination of a first subsequent application?
 - At first instance Yes No
 - At the appeal stage Yes No
- Is a removal order suspended during the examination of a second, third, subsequent application?
 - At first instance Yes No
 - At the appeal stage Yes No

The law⁷⁰ deals with subsequent asylum applications within the context of the accelerated procedure. Such applications are considered inadmissible, if the asylum seeker did not state in their subsequent asylum application any new facts or circumstances or did not provide new evidence. Within 3 calendar days (excluding public holidays) after lodging the subsequent asylum application the decision-maker (State Agency for Refugees - SAR) has to establish these facts and if this deadline is not being met, the subsequent application should be automatically referred to a regular procedure. Automatic referral of the asylum application to a regular procedure is regulated in the law⁷¹ to encourage SAR's interviewers to make a decision within the 3-day deadline. Thus, a subsequent application can be examined in the regular procedure, but not because it was considered admissible, but because the case worker missed the deadline to declare it inadmissible within the strict terms of the accelerated procedure. The same rules apply regardless of the actual number of subsequent applications that have been submitted (first, second or more) or the time that lapsed between the submission of the subsequent application and the first or any other previous status determination procedures. Usually, subsequent asylum applications are being rejected in the accelerated procedure within the 3-day deadline. In case the SAR decides not to refer the subsequent asylum application to the regular procedure, it will have to prove before the court that the stated facts are not new but were already examined in the previous asylum procedure.

It is mandatory by law to organise an interview in the case of a subsequent asylum application and this was strictly applied in practice until autumn of 2013. After the increase of the number of asylum applications in 2013, the SAR changed its practice and ever since halted all interviews with subsequent applicants. Before, when there were no new statements, facts or evidence provided by the asylum seeker, the interviews were just a formality. Presently, no interviews are conducted and no decisions are taken with regard to all subsequent applications⁷². Decisions on subsequent asylum applications can be appealed under the same terms as any other decision made in the accelerated procedure, i.e. – within the 7-day deadline and before the respective county court in the area of residence of the asylum seeker. The Court's decision is final. Legal aid can be requested, but it is rarely provided by the court to asylum seekers lodging a subsequent asylum application, unless there are new facts and circumstances related to the subsequent asylum application.

The main obstacles for asylum seekers who lodge a subsequent application include the lack of a right to be accommodated as well as the considerably delayed registration of all subsequent asylum applications, which can be postponed for months by the SAR. These obstacles are a matter of policy, not law and are applied by the SAR in order to discourage the applicants to pursue their subsequent application. During this period of time asylum seekers remain undocumented and risk detention and deportation. The situation aggravated since autumn of 2013 when the SAR in practice suspended registration of all subsequent applications, except those from Syria in order to prioritise newly arrived asylum seekers, .

⁷¹ Law on Asylum and Refugees, Article 70, Para 2 .

⁷² Bulgarian Helsinki Committee, Monthly situation report, January 2014.

Lodging an appeal against a negative decision on a subsequent asylum application has automatic suspensive effect. From the moment of registration of the subsequent asylum application until the moment when the negative decision on such application becomes final (i.e. when there are no more possibilities to appeal before the court, meaning one court instance in case the subsequent application is processed in the accelerated procedure, two court instances when the subsequent application is processed in the regular procedure), the removal order is also automatically suspended under the law.⁷³ However, in the draft law 19 November 2013 amending the Law on Asylum and Refugees (LAR)⁷⁴ this arrangement is maintained only with respect to first subsequent applications and deleted with regard to second, or any following, subsequent applications. If adopted, the amendment would allow the removal of the applicant, if his/her first subsequent asylum application is refused with a final decision, regardless of the submission of any following subsequent application by that person.

E. Guarantees for vulnerable groups of asylum seekers (children, traumatised persons, survivors of torture)

1. Special Procedural guarantees

Indicators:

- Is there a specific identification mechanism in place to systematically identify vulnerable asylum seekers? Yes No Yes, but only for some categories
- Are there special procedural arrangements/guarantees for vulnerable people? Yes No Yes, but only for some categories

The law does not envisage any specific identification mechanisms for vulnerable categories of asylum seekers, except for children. Neither guidelines, nor practice exist to accommodate the specific needs of these groups. The law does not exclude the application of accelerated procedure with regard to torture victims, but it is excluded for unaccompanied asylum seeking children. Identification is mainstreamed in the training of caseworkers, and special trainings are rarely provided. In 2008 the SAR and UNHCR agreed⁷⁵ on standard operation procedures (SOPs) to be followed with respect to treatment of victims of Sexual and Gender-based Violence (SGBV). However, these were never applied in practice and therefore presently a process for revision⁷⁶ of the SOPs is ongoing, which also aims to include new categories or vulnerable groups.

NGOs are very concerned by the lack of procedural guarantees for vulnerable asylum seekers in the Bulgarian asylum procedure. Most worrying is the situation of unaccompanied asylum-seeking children who are not appointed legal guardians during the examination of their asylum application. The law provides that a legal guardian needs to be appointed immediately.⁷⁷ However, if a guardian is not appointed, whatever the reason may be, the law allows⁷⁸ a social worker to be appointed instead to assist the child during the examination. Thus, the law stipulates the right of the administration (State Agency for Refugees) to disregard the standard for the protection of the child and to determine the child's asylum application without a guardian, if the interviews are conducted in the presence of a social worker. Social workers however cannot legally replace guardians and assume their functions. The special Law on Child Protection explicitly envisages⁷⁹ that any administration conducting any type of hearing with a child should do so in the presence of a parent, guardian or other person who provides direct care and who is familiar with the child concerned. Notwithstanding, in addition the law also requires⁸⁰ the assistance of a social worker during the hearing. Thus, the law itself explicitly distinguishes the functions of guardians and social workers⁸¹ who cannot replace one another. The expert group appointed by the Parliamentary Commission on Human Rights to provide an analysis of the November 2013 draft amendments to the asylum law⁸² unanimously advised the Commission to amend the draft with provisions relating to the mandatory appointment of guardians to unaccompanied asylum seeking children. It is expected that these and all other recommendations of the expert group will be considered by the Human Rights Commission between the first⁸³ and second voting of the draft amendments in the plenary session of the Parliament, which as of 10 April 2014 is not yet scheduled.

In practice, for the time being this legal opportunity is applied extensively by the asylum administration and in all cases status determination is carried out with the assistance of social workers instead of appointed guardians. However, the law does not provide for any mandatory training of the social workers relating to the special situation of unaccompanied asylum-seeking children or even relating to the aim and modalities of the asylum procedure in general. Lacking basic skills and knowledge the social workers cannot and do not assist and advise properly the unaccompanied asylum-seeking children, especially in a situation where legal aid is not secured (as described in the section on legal assistance under regular procedures). UNHCR and NGO reports raised concerns related to cases where the lack of training of the social workers assisting unaccompanied children impacted negatively on the outcome of their asylum procedures.⁸⁴

2. Use of medical reports

Indicators:

- Does the legislation provide for the possibility of a medical report in support of the applicant's statements regarding past persecution or serious harm?

<input type="checkbox"/> Yes	<input type="checkbox"/> Yes, but not in all cases	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/> No
------------------------------	--	--
- Are medical reports taken into account when assessing the credibility of the applicant's statements?

<input checked="" type="checkbox"/> Yes	<input type="checkbox"/> No

The legislation does not explicitly provide for the possibility of proving past persecution or harm by medical reports specifically, but neither prohibits any type of any expert opinion, written or oral evidence in this respect. Therefore medical reports can be and, in practice, are used to support the assessment of the asylum application. However, such reports are only exceptionally commissioned by the case worker of the decision-making authority (State Agency for Refugees – SAR). In most if not all of the cases where medical reports were provided, this was at the initiative of the asylum seeker or their legal representative. The costs for such medical report are covered by legal aid where it is awarded and legal aid is awarded in the majority of cases. However, in case no legal aid is awarded, the costs related to the medical report are at the asylum seeker's own cost. Even if a medical report is submitted, case workers only rarely take them into account, particularly if these are medical assessments related to torture, trauma or sexual violence, provided by NGOs notwithstanding their specialisation or expert quality (e.g. specialised associations for torture survivors⁸⁵, which apply the Istanbul Protocol). The law only in one particular case⁸⁶ mandatorily requires the case worker to order a medical examination, i.e. if there are indications that the asylum seeker might be mentally ill. In this case, if the result of the medical examination report shows that the asylum seeker suffers from disease or mental illness, the case worker approaches the decision-maker, the SAR's chairperson, who refers the case to the court for appointment of a legal guardian to the asylum seeker which is required in order to be able to continue with the examination of the asylum application.

3. Age assessment and legal representation of unaccompanied children

Indicators:

- Does the law provide for an identification mechanism for unaccompanied children?
 Yes No
- Does the law provide for the appointment of a representative to all unaccompanied children?
 Yes No

Under the law⁸⁷ an age assessment should be requested by the caseworker in the case of an asylum application of an unaccompanied child, but the provision requires this only if there are doubts that the applicant is not actually a child. However, the law, does not state the method of the age assessment. In practice, the wrist x-rays method is applied systematically in all cases based on the assumption that this method is more accurate than a psycho-social inquiry. The Supreme Administrative Court,⁸⁸ however, considers this test as non-binding and applies the benefit of the doubt principle, which is also explicitly laid down in the national legislation.⁸⁹ Social workers have an obligation to provide a social report with an opinion on the best interest of the child concerned in every individual case. The legal guardians have the right and obligation to represent the children during their status determination procedure and actively support the establishment of facts and circumstances, ask questions, appeal negative decisions, and - most importantly - to ensure that a lawyer is appointed for all these activities. Recent jurisprudence of the Administrative Court Sofia City ruled that status determinations, in absence of an appointed guardian are unlawful, but this has had no impact yet on the practice.⁹⁰

Theoretically there is a sufficient number of legal representatives – 1273 registered alone in Sofia – available to represent all unaccompanied children, if the law is actually and properly enforced. However, training would need to be provided to legal aid lawyers with respect to the specific needs of unaccompanied asylum seeking children during the status determination procedures.

F. The safe country concepts

Indicators:

- Does national legislation allow for the use of safe country of origin concept in the asylum procedure? Yes No
- Does national legislation allow for the use of safe third country concept in the asylum procedure? Yes No
- Does national legislation allow for the use of first country of asylum concept in the asylum procedure? Yes No
- Is there a list of safe countries of origin? Yes No
- Is the safe country of origin concept used in practice? Yes No
- Is the safe third country concept used in practice? Yes No

National legislation⁹¹ allows for the use of a safe country of origin and safe third country concept in the asylum procedure. Prior to the EU accession, national lists of safe countries of origin and third safe countries were adopted annually by the asylum administration (State Agency for Refugees - SAR) and applied extensively to substantiate negative first instance decisions.

However, the national court considered that the safe country of origin and safe third country concept can only be applied as a rebuttable presumption⁹² that could be contested by the asylum seeker in each and every individual case. In 2007, the national law was amended⁹³ to introduce explicitly the right for the asylum seeker to rebut the safe country presumption. The amendment also referred to the EU common list of safe countries of origin that was supposed to be adopted according to Article 29 2005 Asylum Procedures Directive as the only source applicable for considering a country of origin as safe. As a result, ever since the adoption of this amendment, the safe country of origin concept became inapplicable in practice as far as such a common EU list has never been adopted. The 2007 amendment makes the same reference to the Asylum Procedures Directive with regard to the adoption of the national safe third countries list, apparently based on an erroneous reading of the Asylum Procedures Directive. For this reason, there is no safe third countries list and the safe third country is not applied as a concept.

G. Treatment of specific nationalities

Since mid-August 2013 the number of asylum seekers started to rise rapidly, the majority being persons fleeing from the war in Syria. Until the end of 2013 the number of applications for international protection in Bulgaria reached its highest ever annual level. It increased from 1,387 in 2012 to 7,144 officially registered applications until 31 December 2013, which marked 415% increase. The top country of origin was Syria, the applicants from which constituted 63% of all applications (4,516 applications), followed by Stateless applicants (7,8%; 561 applications), Algeria (6%; 434 applications) and Afghanistan (4,3%; 310 applications).

In 2013 the overall recognition rate was 34% or 2462 individuals, of whom 2,5% (183 individuals) were recognised as refugees and 32% (2279 individuals) were granted subsidiary protection (humanitarian status). In 4,9% (354 individuals) of the cases, the application was rejected, in 9,1% (657 individuals) of the cases status determination procedures were ceased, and in 11,5% (824 individuals) of the cases, the application was terminated. Thus, final first instance decisions were taken in 59,5% of the caseload, which means that 39,5% of the caseload was still pending at the end of 2013. It has to also be noted that the majority of recognition decisions (85%, 1944 individuals) were taken with regard to Syrian asylum seekers who were mostly granted a subsidiary form of protection under national law (149 refugee statuses, 1795 humanitarian statuses)⁹⁴ on account of the war in Syria. Asylum applications by other nationalities or from other countries of origin were in the vast majority of cases rejected with very few exceptions.

As is the case for other refugees, access to the asylum procedure remains one of the main problems for Syrian refugees (see section on 'Registration of the asylum application'). In addition, according to information obtained by the Bulgarian Helsinki Committee, the Bulgarian Interior Ministry has provided the Syrian embassy in Sofia with biometric information about Syrian asylum seekers, such as fingerprints, in order to confirm their identity as Syrians.⁹⁵ BHC's open letter⁹⁶ to the Ministry calls the action a violation of principles of protection and a threat to the security of the asylum-seeker.⁹⁷

On 17 October 2013, EASO and Bulgaria agreed an Operating Plan⁹⁸ for the period up to September 2014, which will focus on: the identification and pre-registration of mixed migration flows; referral of vulnerable asylum seekers to appropriate procedures; support for the asylum decision-making process; updating country of origin information; delivering EASO training to new staff; providing advice on use of EU financial assistance. The Plan was drafted in response to an official request for support from Bulgaria, in light of the country's overburdened asylum system.

Syrian nationals proving their identity by original Syrian identity documents were almost automatically granted humanitarian protection. The duration of the interview and the decision in the general asylum procedure were shortened for Syrian nationals by prioritizing their claims for international protection. Non-Syrian nationals however, remain very much a neglected group due to the priority that has been given to the Syrian applicants⁹⁹. The situation with regard to reception conditions for asylum seekers and refugees from Syria, although it has improved significantly after the initial period of reception in the autumn of 2013, is still problematic in many aspects. For further details on the situation with regard to reception conditions, see the section 'Reception conditions'.

Under the law (Article 32 of the Law on Asylum and Refugees) refugees have rights equal to nationals with only a few exceptions, e.g. to vote or to be elected, to serve in the army, to be appointed in public positions that explicitly require nationality, and the like.

Humanitarian status holders are provided with the same rights as third country nationals with permanent residence status (Article 36 of the Law on Asylum and Refugees). Humanitarian status is not limited in time and their beneficiaries enjoy the same right of family reunification as refugees. The majority of Syrian nationals are granted humanitarian status as a prioritised group, fleeing as situation of internal armed conflict¹⁰⁰.

Access to social welfare system and labour market to is automatic, regardless of status, without the need for any formal authorisation.

Reception Conditions

A. Access and forms of reception conditions

1. Criteria and restrictions to access reception conditions

Indicators:

- Are asylum seekers entitled to material reception conditions according to national legislation :
 - o During the accelerated procedure?
 Yes Yes, but limited to reduced material conditions No
 - o During admissibility procedures:
 Yes Yes, but limited to reduced material conditions No
 - o During the regular procedure:
 Yes Yes, but limited to reduced material conditions No
 - o During the Dublin procedure:
 Yes Yes, but limited to reduced material conditions No
 - o During the appeal procedure (first appeal and onward appeal):
 Yes Yes, but limited to reduced material conditions No
 - o In case of a subsequent application:
 Yes Yes, but limited to reduced material conditions No
- Is there a requirement in the law that only asylum seekers who lack resources are entitled to material reception conditions? Yes No

Asylum seekers are entitled to material reception conditions according to national legislation¹⁰¹ during all types of asylum procedures. Rights provided include food, accommodation, social assistance, health care and psychological assistance. Although there is not explicit provision in the law, in practice asylum seekers without resources are accommodated with priority in the reception centres in case of lack of capacity to accommodate all new arrivals. Among all, circumstances such as specific needs and risk of destitution are assessed in each case. Destitution risk assessment is prepared by taking into account the individual situation of the asylum seeker of concern, such as, but not exhaustively - resources and means for self-support, profession and employment opportunities if work is formally permitted, and the number and vulnerabilities of dependent family members.

The sole category of asylum seekers that is excluded from these material reception conditions is that of asylum seekers who have lodged a subsequent asylum application. However if they fall under one of the categories of vulnerable asylum seekers they can enjoy these entitlements without restrictions. Competence to decide on vulnerability in such cases lies with the head of the respective reception unit. Notwithstanding asylum seekers have the right to withdraw from these benefits, if their application is pending in the regular procedure and they declare that they are in possession of means and resources to support themselves and chose to live outside reception centres.

The law stipulates¹⁰² that each and every applicant shall be entitled to receive a registration card in the course of the procedure. In addition, the law implies a legal fiction,¹⁰³ according to which the registration card does not certify the alien's identity due to its temporary nature and the specific characteristics of establishing the facts and circumstances during the Refugee Status Determination (RSD) procedures which are based, for the most part, on circumstantial evidence. Hence, the registration card serves the sole purpose of certifying the identity declared by the asylum seeker. Nevertheless, this document is an absolute prerequisite for the access to the rights enjoyed by asylum seekers during the RSD procedure, namely – remaining on the territory, receiving shelter and subsistence, social assistance (under the same conditions as Bulgarian nationals and receiving the same amount), health insurance, access to health care, psychological support and education. However, due to the lack of capacity to ensure the timely registration of applicants by the available staff, since October 2013 SAR has issued the so-called “notifications” instead of the regular identification documents (registration cards). In addition to the attached photograph, the applicant’s name, the country of origin and the date of issuance, the notification also contains instructions as to the next appearance before SAR for the purpose of applicant’s registration under Art. 61(2) LAR. The period between the date of issuing the notification and the date planned for registration presently exceeds six months. Meanwhile, the asylum seekers with issued “notifications” do not have access to their rights to accommodation, social support, medical assistance, etc., Thus, SAR has institutionalised its administrative inaction and its absolute refusal of fulfilling its obligations in terms of registration, accommodation and status determination within a reasonable timeframe. In the draft amendments to the law, the drafter - Ministry of Interior - proposed a provision to formally adopt “notifications” as an official document and envisaged that they have to be issued within 3 working days, not 3 calendar days which is the requirement of recast Reception Conditions Directive.¹⁰⁴ This arrangement was criticised within the expert group, appointed by the Parliamentarian Human Rights Commission and the latter casted away the proposal during the second preliminary reading for the draft.¹⁰⁵

Due to the rapidly growing asylum population until the end of 2013, access to procedure and asylum registration from national detention centres were hugely delayed without any prospect for short-term resolution. Seeking for a release from detention, asylum seekers started to submit formal waivers from their right to accommodation and social assistance, as warranted by law¹⁰⁶, and to declare false domiciles (so called “external addresses”). Those waivers were largely solicited by SAR in violation of the law¹⁰⁷. As of 15 March 2014 according to the official statistics 3,874 asylum seekers reside at external addresses at their own expense. On account of the submitted waivers none of them may request social assistance or financial support from the SAR. Among them there are still individuals who are not registered and documented as asylum seekers¹⁰⁸, although very few indeed. Many were homeless or living in slums. In the newly open reception centres and temporary shelters (see 'Types of accommodation') for quite a long period of time until February 2014 the government not only failed to provide for the nutrition, medical or social assistance to asylum seekers who did not sign waivers and therefore, have been accommodated in reception centres; but neither any of them was duly registered or documented on time. Forced by these circumstances 2,619 asylum seekers tried to exit irregularly Bulgaria until the end of 2013¹⁰⁹. Under the law¹¹⁰, an attempt to exit the territory of the country in an irregular manner is considered a crime, hence asylum seekers could face criminal charges and conviction if intercepted.

2. Forms and levels of material reception conditions

Indicators:

- Amount of the financial allowance/vouchers granted to asylum seekers on 31/12/2012 (per month, in original currency and in euros): BGN 65.00 / EUR 33.23

The forms of material support include accommodation in reception centres and social assistance in cash. The law does not limit the length of stay in a reception centre. Asylum seekers can remain in the centre pending the appeal procedure against a negative decision issued in any of the existing status determination procedures. Asylum seekers have access to the labour market if no final decision (including the appeal procedure in case of a negative decision at first instance) has been taken within 1 year since the registration. In draft amendments proposed in November 2013, the period is shortened to 9 months¹¹¹ in order to comply with Article 15(1) of 2013/33/EU Recast Reception Conditions directive.

The amount of the cash assistance is not provided in the law, but it is equal to the minimum social aid, granted to nationals on the basis of monthly minimum wages, which as of 31 March 2014 is BGN 65 (33.23 €) monthly (adult or child). The amount is unanimously criticised by UNHCR and refugee assisting NGOs¹¹² as fully insufficient to meet even the most basic needs for nutrition. The situation is particularly serious for unaccompanied children who are not accommodated in specialised children facilities, but in common asylum reception centres, where they have to manage on their own and take care of shopping, cooking, cleaning, etc. Very few unaccompanied children manage to cover their expenses with the cash provided and many reports to be undernourished.

Asylum seekers are not requested to contribute to the cost of their reception. In general, asylum seekers are not treated less favourably than nationals with regard to the monthly monetary assistance available, however the reception arrangements do not take into account the fact that asylum seekers do not have any other means of support which are at the disposal of nationals, such as savings, property, family/relative networks, etc. In addition, delays in the registration and documentation prevented asylum seekers from receiving their BGN 65 monthly allowance for a period of several months between October 2013 until February 2014 (see 'Criteria and restrictions to access reception conditions'). During this period of time asylum seekers were fed and provided clothing, medicines and hygienic materials entirely from charity coordinated by the Red Cross and donated by local non-governmental, community and grass-roots organisations, some foreign or international donors and the Bulgarian population. As of February 2014 the government started to provide through (a private caterer?) two hot meals per day to asylum seekers accommodated in the reception centres or shelters. A monthly monetary allowance is also being provided, although not on a regular basis due to the national budget deficit. However, none of these types of material or social/financial support is provided to urban asylum seekers who live outside the reception centres of the SAR (see, 'Criteria and restrictions to access reception conditions').

3. Types of accommodation

Indicators:

- Number of places in all the reception centres (both permanent and for first arrivals): 4150
- Type of accommodation most frequently used in a regular procedure :
 - Reception centre Hotel/hostel Emergency shelter private housing other (please explain)
- Type of accommodation most frequently used in an accelerated procedure :
 - Reception centre Hotel/hostel Emergency shelter private housing other (please explain)
- Number of places in private accommodation: 0
- Number of reception centres: 7
- Are there instances of asylum seekers not having access to reception accommodation because of a shortage of places? Yes No
- What is, if available, the average length of stay of asylum seekers in the reception centres? 6 to 8 months
- Are unaccompanied children ever accommodated with adults in practice? Yes No

Reception centres are managed by the State Agency for Refugees (SAR). Alternative accommodation outside the reception centres is allowed under the law,¹¹³ but only if it is paid by the asylum seekers themselves and if they have consented to waive their right to the monthly social allowance. Until September 2013 there were 2 reception centres existing in Sofia (Ovcha Kupel suburb), Banya (Central Bulgaria) and one transit centre in Pastrogor (South-Eastern Bulgaria, next to Bulgarian-Turkish border).

In order to address the lack of reception capacity, in 2013 the SAR rapidly opened new accommodation facilities. During the period end-September to mid-October 4 new centres were opened, namely - Vrazhdebna (a suburb in Sofia with capacity of 420 places), Voenna Rampa (again in Sofia with capacity of 700 places), Harmanli (in South-Eastern Bulgaria with planned capacity of 1450 places) and in Kovachevtsi village (350 places). At the moment of their opening neither the infrastructure, nor the material conditions in these centres met even the minimum EU standards for adequate living conditions for applicants,¹¹⁴ i.e. to guarantee their subsistence and to protect their physical and mental health. Moreover, these conditions were entirely contrary to the most basic reception standards, constituting even inhumane and degrading treatment.¹¹⁵ All reception centres, old and new ones, were severely overcrowded, with asylum seekers staying in common living areas of the centre. There were no special places provided for vulnerable groups or people with special needs. SAR guaranteed a special floor in the RRC in Sofia for UAM but accommodation conditions were similar to those in other centres; children did not receive specific treatment. There were no dedicated personnel, classrooms, kindergartens or similar possibilities of ensuring a standard of living adequate for minors' physical, mental, spiritual, moral and social development¹¹⁶. The conditions were particularly severe in Harmanli centre, where asylum seekers were placed on the premises of former military barracks and providing an even lesser standard, as asylum seekers are accommodated under a closed regime in tents and in "containers", without electricity and sewerage, under extremely poor living and hygienic conditions, and a high risk of epidemics. The only exception was Kovachevtsi centre, where conditions were acceptable from the beginning.

On 2 October 2013, the asylum authority's manager was dismissed because of the failure to provide adequate reception conditions. Until mid-November 2013 the whole senior management of the SAR was gradually replaced. Starting from December 2013 repairs and refurbishment are ongoing in all new centres and it is planned to continue until April 2014. As of 31 March 2014 reception facilities are largely in a reasonable state.

The reception shelter in Kovachevtsi is considered a model centre (for local standards).

Centres in Banya, Sofia and Pastrogor reached a level of conditions which could be considered as adequate and meeting the reception standards as laid down in the Recast reception Conditions Directive No. 2013/33/EU.

The centres in Harmanli and Vrazhdebna are still a work in progress, renovation has started and some progress has already been made. Voenna Rampa centre is still below standards¹¹⁷.

Separate facilities for families, single women, unaccompanied children or traumatised asylum seekers do not exist.. The SAR announced in January 2014 its plan to designate the existing reception centre in Banya village, Central Bulgaria for accommodation of unaccompanied children and families with little children. In practice, all unaccompanied children up to 14 years of age who do not have any relatives in the country are accommodated in orphanages. In the draft amendments to the Law on Asylum and Refugees (LAR)¹¹⁸ the government purposed unaccompanied children to be accommodated in families of relatives, foster families, child shelters of residential type, specialised orphanages or other facilities with special conditions for unaccompanied children. During the accommodation crisis unaccompanied children were largely accommodated together with adults, often in facilities with conditions that were below minimum standards, including in closed conditions in Harmanli centre, which was open not until mid-February 2014. In the draft law of November 2013 amending the LAR¹¹⁹, the government also envisaged accommodation of unaccompanied asylum seeking children in closed facilities, although under exceptional circumstances and in separate premises within the closed centre.

4. Conditions in reception facilities

As mentioned in the section on types of accommodation, the main form of accommodation used is reception centres. Further to the description of the recent developments and ongoing renovation of the reception centres, all centres provide medical care, either through own medical staff or Médecins Sans Frontières (MSF), allow access to legal aid via volunteers of the Bulgarian Helsinki Committee and provide two hot meals per day. Wherever possible there is a genuine effort to accommodate nuclear families together and in separate rooms. Single asylum seekers are accommodated together with others, although conditions vary considerably from one centre to another.

For example, in Kovachevtsi the biggest number of individuals accommodated in one room is 4 persons, in Sofia (Ovcha Kupel suburb) up to 6 persons, but in Harmanli, Vrazhdebna or in Voenna Rampa in particular it is not unusual to have up to 20 individuals accommodated in one room, organised in two-storied beds as in military barracks. In cases when renovation is undertaken in the respective facility this could also be applied to families, which can disrupt their family life and usually creates tensions among the inhabitants.

¹¹⁸ Law on Asylum and Refugees Draft Amendments, Article 34, Para 4.

¹¹⁹ Law on Asylum and Refugees Draft Amendments, Article 45e and Article 47, Para 4.

In Harmanli and Voanna Rampa the national standards for showers/toilets facilities per capita is not yet met. Cleaning provided by the SAR staff is not sufficient in these centres, therefore MSF and Red Cross provide both additional cleaning services as well as chemical toilets.

Since 2 February 2014 food is cooked and delivered to asylum seekers in the reception centres two times per day from the National Army's Artel, therefore in all centres cooking is no longer allowed. The food provided in the centres generally meets the required nutritional values and meat (without pork) is included in the diet at least 3 days per week.

Places for religious worship are not available in any of the centres as space that was previously dedicated to worshipping is currently used to accommodate residents. Activities to organise language training and leisure activities for children are undertaken, but are for the time being sponsored by the UNHCR. UNHCR also funded an Information Centre, located in the capital for urban asylum seekers and refugees living in the Sofia region.

Some level of standardisation has taken place in the intake procedure and registration procedure. There is a basic database of residents in place. An information leaflet regarding the asylum procedure is provided upon registration in the centre and other information with regard to rights and procedures are provided by UNHCR or NGOs. Social workers from the Bulgarian Red Cross assist SAR staff to ensure that individuals with specific needs are taken care of. However, due to ongoing refurbishment and open access to the centres of all kinds of service providers, measures to prevent sex and gender based violence are still not sufficient to properly guarantee safety and security of the population in the centres.

Recognised refugees do also have the right to receive financial support up to 6 months after the positive decision¹²⁰. As the National Integration Programme 2011-2013 ended without being replaced for the time being, therefore currently the only option for recognised refugees and humanitarian status holders is to remain in the reception centres during this period. However, it has to be noted that due to the undergoing repairs and reconstruction the places for accommodation are being limited as people are often asked to vacate the premises for refurbishment. However, these are only recognised individuals not asylum seekers. As of 26 March 2014¹²¹ out of 4150 places in total 3 412 places are occupied, which consist 82% of the national capacity.

5. Reduction or withdrawal of reception conditions

Indicators:

- Does the legislation provide for the possibility to reduce material reception conditions?
 Yes No
- Does the legislation provide for the possibility to withdraw material reception conditions?
 Yes No

Reduction of material reception conditions is not possible under the law. Withdrawal is admissible under the law¹²² in cases of disappearance of the asylum seeker and subsequent asylum applications. However, the latter cannot be a ground for withdrawal if the asylum seeker lodging a subsequent application could be considered vulnerable. Under the law,¹²³ as vulnerable categories are considered: children, pregnant women, elderly, single parents, if accompanied by their children, people with disabilities and those, who suffered severe forms of physical or psychological harm or sexual abuse. In this case, the asylum seeker lodging a subsequent application should be granted all available reception conditions. In practice this does not happen due to the current increased number of asylum seekers . As a result, asylum seekers lodging a subsequent application, including those that are vulnerable do not get any reception conditions in practice.

In case accommodation in a reception centre is refused, this can be appealed before the court. Legal aid is available with respect of representation before the court once the appeal is submitted. Bulgaria does not apply sanctions for serious breaches of the rules of accommodation centres and violent behaviour, except for destruction of accommodation centre's property, which is sanctioned with a fine between BGN 50 to 200. The grounds laid down in Article 20 (2) of the Recast Reception Conditions Directive are not yet transposed into the national legislation. Under the law,¹²⁴ the directors of transit/reception centres are competent to decide on accommodation. These decisions should be issued in writing as all other acts of administration.¹²⁵ However, in practice asylum seekers are informed orally. Nonetheless, the refusal still can be appealed before the relevant regional administrative court in 7 days from its communication to the respective asylum seeker. In this case, however, asylum seekers are having difficulties to prove before the court when they have been informed about the accommodation refusal, which may result in cessation of the court proceedings. Due to the undergoing repairs and reconstruction of new centres open in 2013, recognised refugees who were granted accommodation in the reception centres after their recognition are often asked to vacate the premises for refurbishment.

6. Access to reception centres by third parties

Indicators:

- Do family members, legal advisers, UNHCR and/or NGOs have access to reception centres?
 Yes with limitations No

The law does not provide explicitly for access to reception centres for family members, legal advisers, UNHCR and NGOs, but no limitations are applied in practice. Lately, however, the management of Banya reception centre (Central Bulgaria) has been reported to obstruct the access to NGOs and lawyers to the premises of the reception centre without any explanation in which cases access was granted only after an intervention before the State Agency for Refugees' chairperson.¹²⁶ NGOs and social mediators from refugee community organisations are allowed to operate advice centres within the reception premises in all national reception centres. Access to reception centres is limited only during the night.

7. Addressing special reception needs of vulnerable persons

Indicators:

- Is there an assessment of special reception needs of vulnerable persons in practice? Yes No

The law provides a definition¹²⁷ of vulnerability. According to the provision, the following categories of asylum seekers are considered as vulnerable: unaccompanied children, pregnant women, elderly people, single parents, if accompanied by their underage children, individuals with disabilities and those who have been subjected to severe forms of psychological, physical or sexual abuse. The recast Reception Conditions Directive's definition of vulnerable categories is not yet transposed into the national legislation.

¹²⁴ Law on Asylum and Refugees, Article 51, Para 2.

¹²⁵ Administrative Procedure Code, Article 59, Para2.

¹²⁶ Bulgarian Helsinki Committee, Monthly RSD Monitoring Report, 31 March 2013.

¹²⁷ Law on Asylum and Refugees, Article 30a.

There are no specific measures neither in law nor in practice to address the specific needs of these vulnerable categories. The law only requires that vulnerability is taken into account when deciding on accommodation, but due to restricted reception capacity and poor material conditions, this is only exceptionally applied, if at all. In 2008 the SAR and UNHCR agreed¹²⁸ on standard operation procedures (SOPs) to be followed with respect to treatment of victims of Sexual and Gender-based Violence (SGBV). However, these were never applied in practice and therefore a process for revision¹²⁹ of the SOPs is currently ongoing, which also aims to include new categories or vulnerable groups. In late November 2013, following a joint visit to Bulgaria by the UN High Commissioner for Refugees and the EU Commissioner for Home Affairs, UNHCR announced 'Level 1 Emergency' in response to the Government request to immediately address several gaps in the areas of asylum and reception. As a result UNHCR temporarily mobilised emergency resources for the remainder of 2013 and 2014 in supporting the government to address the identified priority gaps in co-ordination with implementing partners and various other stakeholders. Among these, UNHCR commissioned to the Bulgarian Helsinki Committee and the Red Cross as its longest-standing partners in Bulgaria the implementation of daily monitoring and provision direct legal and social assistance, intervention and services in all asylum centres across the country with special attention to identification of individuals with vulnerabilities and specific needs.

8. Provision of information

There are no specific rules for information provided on rights and obligations relating to reception conditions. Asylum seekers obtain the necessary information on their legal status and the access to the labour market through the information sources with regard to their rights and obligations in general (see Information for Asylum Seekers). The SAR has an obligation¹³⁰ to provide information in a language comprehensible to the asylum seekers within fifteen days from filing their application, which has to include information on the terms and procedures and rights and obligations of asylum seekers during procedures, as well as the organisations providing legal and social assistance. However, in reality this was not provided within the 15 day time period laid down in Article 5 of the Reception Conditions Directive and in Art. 5 of Directive 2013/33/EU. In practice, prior the increased number of asylum seekers by the end of 2013, this information was given upon the registration of the asylum seeker in SAR territorial units by way of a brochure. For a significant period of time between September 2013 - February 2014 the registration was delayed, which also meant that asylum seekers did not receive such information for a considerable time after they arrived in Bulgaria.

9. Freedom of movement

Asylum seekers are not restricted in their freedom of movement to any particular area within Bulgaria. Restrictions apply only in relation to the requirement for the asylum administration (SAR) to be duly notified¹³¹ in advance with regard to any change of the address of residence of asylum seekers. They can freely move within the State, no restrictions are applied with regards to the area of residence.

However, it must be noted that on 19 November 2013, the government presented to Parliament a bill for amending the Asylum Law.¹³² The proposals include among others the introduction of a general detention regime for all categories of asylum seekers, regardless of their individual characteristics, vulnerability, age, health status, special needs or other relevant circumstances and irrespective of the stage of their status determination procedure as set in the Law on the Asylum and Refugees (LAR). For further details on the proposal see the section detention (general).

B. Employment and education

1. Access to the labour market

Indicators:

- Does the legislation allow for access to the labour market for asylum seekers? Yes No
- If applicable, what is the time limit after which asylum seekers can access the labour market:
1 year from the registration as asylum seeker
- Are there restrictions to access employment in practice? Yes No

National legislation allows for access to the labour market for asylum seekers,¹³³ if the determination procedure takes longer than 1 year from the submission of the asylum application. The permit is issued by the asylum administration (State Refugee Agency - SAR) itself in a simple procedure that verifies only the duration of the status determination procedure and whether it is still pending.

The draft amendments of the LAR¹³⁴ provides for the amendment of Article 29(3) LAR, which reduces the suspension period for access to the labour market for asylum seekers from one year to nine months. The proposal is entirely consistent with Article 15(1) of Directive 2013/33/EU, whereby Member States shall ensure that applicants have access to the labour market no later than nine months from the date when the application for international protection was lodged if a first instance decision by the competent authority has not been taken and the delay cannot be attributed to the applicant.

Once issued, the permit allows access to all types of employment and social benefits, including assistance when unemployed. Under the law¹³⁵ they also have access to vocational training. In practice, however it is difficult for asylum seekers to find a job, due to the general difficulties resulting from their language skills, the recession and high national rates of unemployment.

2. Access to education

Indicators:

- Does the legislation provide for access to education for asylum seeking children? Yes No
- Are children able to access education in practice? Yes No

Access to education for asylum-seeking children is provided explicitly by the national legislation without an age limit. The provision not only guarantees full access to free of charge education in regular schools, but also for vocational training under the rules and conditions applicable to Bulgarian children. In practice there were some obstacles related to the methodology used to identify the particular school grade that the child should be directed to, but this problem should be solved by appointment of special commissions by the Educational Inspectorate with the Ministry of Education and Science. Presently, asylum seeking children accommodated in Pastrogor transit centre are deprived in practice from this right as the SAR did not provide the necessary school arrangements in this remote area.

¹³³ Law on Asylum and Refugees, Article 29, Para 3.

¹³⁴ See Reception conditions, Access and forms of reception conditions, Freedom of movement.

¹³⁵ Law on Asylum and Refugees, Article 39, Para 1, item 2.

No preparatory classes are offered to facilitate access to the national education system. Asylum seeking children with special needs do not enjoy alternative arrangements, other than those provided for Bulgarian children¹³⁶.

Adult refugees and asylum seekers have a right to a vocational training. Practical obstacles may be encountered by asylum seekers in relation to access to universities as they have difficulties to prove diplomas already acquired in their respective countries of origin. This is due to a lack of relevant information on diplomas.

The draft amendments of the LAR¹³⁷ introduce a new provision¹³⁸, according to which asylum seeking children may be detained in closed centres. This will deprive children from their right to education as the accommodation in closed centres would effectively prevent them from access education, a right that is presently guaranteed by law.¹³⁹

C. Health care

Indicators:

- Is access to emergency health care for asylum seekers guaranteed in national legislation?
 Yes No
- In practice, do asylum seekers have adequate access to health care?
 Yes with limitations No
- Is specialised treatment for victims of torture or traumatised asylum seekers available in practice? Yes Yes, to a limited extent No
- If material reception conditions are reduced/ withdrawn are asylum seekers still given access to health care? Yes No

Asylum seekers are entitled to the same health care as nationals. Under the law, the asylum administration (SAR) has the obligation to cover the health insurance of asylum seekers. In practice, asylum seekers have access to available health care services, but do face the same difficulties as the nationals due to the generally deteriorated national health care system that suffers great material and financial deficiencies¹⁴⁰. In this situation special conditions for treatment of torture victims and persons suffering mental health problems are not available. According to the law, the medical assistance cannot be affected, if the reception conditions are reduced or withdrawn.

As a result of SAR's large scale omission to register and document¹⁴¹ newly arriving asylum seekers, the access to health care was also negatively affected. Health insurance, which ought to be covered by the SAR for every asylum seeker pending Refugee Status Determination procedures was not covered for the new arrivals for almost 6 months approximately (between September 2013 and February 2014?) due to a lack of proper identification documents and means in the national budget. As of March 2014 there are still many cases of asylum seekers whose access to health care system was not guaranteed due to a lack of relevant coverage from the national budget. Additionally, in any of the newly open temporary accommodation centres hosting the majority of newly arriving asylum seekers, mostly from Syria, health care was not ensured and provided even in case of emergencies;.

Medical assistance is being provided by a nurse and a doctor on a daily basis only in the reception centre in Sofia (Ovcha Kupel suburb); by a doctor in Vrazhdebna; in Banya and Pastrogor transit centre it is provided by a nurse. In Vrazhdebna, Voenna Rampa and Harmanli the medical care is provided on a voluntary basis by Medecins Sans Frontières (MSF).

Detention of Asylum Seekers

A. General

Indicators:

- Total number of asylum seekers detained in the previous year (including those detained in the course of the asylum procedure and those who applied for asylum from detention): 7886
- Number of asylum seekers detained or an estimation at the end of the previous year: 442
- Number of detention centres: 3
- Total capacity: 1000

There are 3 detention centres for irregular migrants in the country - Busmantsi and Lubimets detention centres. The Busmantsi centre is near the capital, Sofia, the Lubimets centre is located in the border area with Turkey and Greece. Although designed for the return of irregular migrants, the centres are also used for detention of undocumented asylum seekers, who crossed the border irregularly, but were unable to apply for asylum before the border police officers and therefore apply for asylum only when they are already in the detention centres. Most common reason for these late asylum applications is the lack of 24 hours interpretation services from all languages at national borders.

On 8 October 2013 a new detention centre with a capacity of 300 persons, provisionally called "distribution centre", was open in the town of Elhovo, managed by the Migration Directorate, MOI. Designated for pre-registration of asylum seekers¹⁴², in practice it is used to detain asylum seekers, apprehended at the land borders outside the official border checkpoint for a period of 20 days approximately until arrangements are made for their further transfer to any of the SAR asylum centres. The total capacity of these three detention centres is 1000 places. In recent years the detention centres were quite often overcrowded¹⁴³ due to the gradual increase of the number of asylum applications on the one hand and, on the other hand, the delayed release for registration of detained asylum seekers.

On 19 November 2013, the government presented to Parliament a bill for amending the Asylum Law¹⁴⁴. The proposals included among others the introduction of a general detention regime for all categories of asylum seekers, regardless of their individual characteristics, vulnerability, age, health status, special needs or other relevant circumstances and irrespective of the stage of their status determination procedure, as set out in the Law on Asylum and Refugees (LAR).

The draft law proposes that as a rule all persons seeking protection are subjected to wide, overall and unconditional detention in closed-type centres and that accommodation in centres of an open type remain exceptional (Article 45B(2) of the proposals). As a result, the proposal is violating the principle enshrined in Article 8(1) of the recast Reception Conditions Directive 2013/32/EU, according to which Member States may not detain a person solely on the basis that they are an applicant for international protection.

B. Grounds for detention

Indicators:

- In practice, are most asylum seekers detained
 - o on the territory: Yes No
- at the border: Yes No
- Are asylum seekers detained in practice during the Dublin procedure?
 Frequently Rarely Never
- Are asylum seekers detained during a regular procedure in practice?
 Frequently Rarely Never
- Are unaccompanied asylum-seeking children detained in practice?
 Frequently Rarely Never
 - o If frequently or rarely, are they only detained in border/transit zones? Yes No
- Are asylum seeking children in families detained in practice?
 Frequently Rarely Never
- What is the maximum detention period set in the legislation (inc extensions): 18 months
- In practice, how long in average are asylum seekers detained? 45 days

In general, detention of third country nationals can be ordered by the border or immigration police on account of their unauthorised entry, irregular residence or lack of valid identity documents. The maximum detention period is 18 months including extensions. Extensions after 6 months can be ordered only by the court. Presently, the law does not include specific provisions on the detention of asylum seekers. In the end of 2011, after 4 years of strategic litigation, the secondary legislation¹⁴⁵ that was providing a legal basis for detention of asylum seekers was amended to prohibit the border police from detaining undocumented asylum seekers, arrested at the national borders in detention centres for irregular third country nationals. Out of all 12,136 persons who applied for asylum in 2013, 7886 persons applied for asylum in detention facilities of the Migration Directorate. Out of all 12,136 asylum seekers who applied before the Border Police or in the detention centres, only 7144 persons were registered as asylum seekers by the State Agency for Refugees until the end of 2013. Thus, 5262 asylum seekers could not register themselves as asylum seekers until the end of the year because of the inability of the SAR to accommodate them and to process their asylum applications in due course. It was not before the end of February 2014 when the SAR was able to finalise the registration of all asylum seekers accommodated in all reception centres, including those newly opened in the autumn of 2013 (See, Reception Conditions, A. Access and forms of reception conditions). Registration of asylum seekers who applied from the national detention centres was also hugely delayed; the average detention duration in 2013 increased to 45 days¹⁴⁶.

Therefore, detention is implemented prior the registration of the asylum seeker in person by the State Agency for Refugees (SAR). The law allows¹⁴⁷ the SAR to conduct the Dublin and accelerated procedures in the detention centres, but only until the opening of transit centres in border areas. In May 2012, Pastrogor transit centre started to function, however the asylum administration (SAR) continued to conduct, in violation of the law, EURODAC fingerprinting in detention centres and to release asylum seekers with a delay.

¹⁴⁷ Law on Asylum and Refugees, §5 of the Transitional Clauses.

As an alternative to detention the legislation envisages daily reporting to the police, but it is not specifically targeting asylum seekers, rather all irregular third country nationals.

In March 2013 the Law on Aliens was amended¹⁴⁸ to prohibit the detention of unaccompanied children in general and to introduce a maximum period of 3 months for the detention of accompanied children who are detained with their parents. In practice, however as of April 2013 unaccompanied children continue to be detained, both asylum seeking and migrant children. The draft law amending the Law on Asylum and Refugees (LAR) also envisages a limitation of freedom of movement in certain areas in the territory of State by a decision of the SAR chairperson, where asylum seekers can be obligated not to leave and reside in other administrative region (district or municipality) than the prescribed one. As alternatives to the detention the draft law mentions in a non-exhaustive manner all forms laid down in the Recast 2013/33/EU Reception Conditions Directive, namely regular reporting to the authorities, the deposit of a financial guarantee, or an obligation to stay at an assigned place police staff is neither required by law, not provided in practice. Verbal abuse, both by staff and other detainees, is reported often by the detainees. Overall conditions with respect to means to maintain personal hygiene as well as general level of cleanness are not satisfactory. Shower and toilets available are not sufficient to meet the needs of the detention population, especially when premises are overcrowded which happens quite often.¹⁴⁹ Detainees are allowed to clean the premises themselves, however they are not provided with means or detergents therefore they have to buy them at their own cost. Clothing is provided only if supplied by NGOs. Bed linen is not washed on a regular basis, but usually once a month. A 2010 report¹⁵⁰ by the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (CPT) recommended an extensive list of improvements and adjustments that ought to be made with respect to cell occupancy, access to light, toilets, showers and personal hygiene products, quantity and quality of food and appropriate and sufficient medication. The 2010 study on vulnerability in detention conducted by Jesuit Refugee Service (JRS) Europe includes the following information on access to medical care and services in detention centres in Bulgaria¹⁵¹.

In terms of medical services - detention centres' medical staff (doctors and a nurse) are seen less than once a month (62.7%), although 27% of detainees who report health problems see them once per week. All detainees report to have had medical examinations upon arrival in the detention centre. Most of detained asylum seekers reported that they can understand the language that the medical care is in, however 30% cannot and feel that the staff should speak more languages to solve this problem. It could be explained by the fact that large percentage of the detainees have spent long time in the country prior detention and had learned Bulgarian. Therefore, the complaint that the medical personnel do not speak any foreign languages should be assessed higher in the problem chart reported, in terms of meeting the communication need of immigrants who were detained short after or upon their arrival in the country. 93.1% of detainees report that they have had their physical health affected (only 6.9% have not). Physical health has on average dropped from 8.45% to 3.17%. According to the detainees interviewed, this has almost nothing to do with availability of medical facilities, but is psychological (76.2%), followed by being affected physically by poor living conditions (19%). This finding demonstrate clearly that the mere fact of detention and being detained situation make people vulnerable per se resulting in immediate negative consequences on physical, but more significantly on the mental health of detainees (see below). 73% are negative about the quality of provided medical care, and 65.5% have specific medical needs that are not being met and need access to appropriate care for this. In terms of mental health - 96.3% of people report that their mental health has been affected. Mental health has dropped on average 9.21 to 2.68. The fact of being behind bars is the most given factor (46.7%) and the effect of it is very negative. As for other reasons for deterioration, living conditions are negligible (3.3%), while 33% say the deterioration of their mental health is because of stress and worries, 30% are specifically worried about their mental health.”

Nutrition is poor, no special diets are provided to children or pregnant women. Health care is a big issue as not all detention centres have medical staff appointed on a daily basis. A nurse and/or a doctor visits detention centres on a weekly basis, but the language barrier and lack of proper medication make these visits almost a formality and without any practical use for the detainees.

Separate wings are provided for families, single women and unaccompanied children. Single men are separated from single women. Other vulnerable persons are detained together with all other detainees. National legislation does not provide for access to education for children in detention centres.

Access to open-air spaces is provided twice a day for a period of one hour each, the spaces in all detention centres are of adequate size. Children in detention centres are using the common outdoor recreational facilities, but not many possibilities for physical exercise exist except the usual ball sports. Reading and leisure materials are provided if only supplied by donations. Computer/internet access is not available in any of the detention centres.

Lawyers as well as representatives of NGOs and UNHCR do have access under the law and in practice to the detention centres during visiting hours but also ad hoc without prior permission when necessary or requested by asylum seekers. Some NGOs¹⁵² signed official agreements with the Migration Directorate and do visit detention centres for monitoring and assistance once a week. Media and politicians do also have access to detention centre, which is authorised upon written request.

There are no mechanisms established to identify vulnerable persons in detention centres. If identified there are no provisions in the law for their release on that account, unless before the court when the length of detention is reviewed after the initial 6 months period.

Asylum seekers are never detained in prisons unless convicted for committing a crime.

A report of the CPT published in March 2012 included specific recommendations to the Bulgarian Government to improve the conditions in the Busmantsi detention centre. The CPT concerns related in particular to the detention of asylum seekers together with irregular migrants awaiting removal, poor hygiene conditions, lack of interpreters which complicated communication between staff and detainees and insufficient psychological care for those detained in the Busmantsi centre.¹⁵³ NGOs are not aware of any specific measures taken to implement the CPT’s recommendations so far.

C. Procedural safeguards and judicial Review of the detention order

Indicator:

- Is there an automatic review of the lawfulness of detention? Yes No

The Government’s response published on 4 December 2012 does not address the issues raised with regard to the Busmantsi detention center. A report by the Open Society Institute Sofia raised similar concerns about the lack of professional interpreters in the detention centers in Bulgaria resulting in asylum seekers and irregular migrants not being properly informed about their rights. See Open Society Institute, Civil Monitoring in Detention Centers, Sofia, February 2012 (only available in Bulgarian).

Asylum seekers, if detained, are treated in the same manner as the rest of the detention population, hence they are informed orally by the detention staff for the reasons of their detention and the possibility to challenge it in the court, but not about the possibility and the methods to apply for legal aid. However, asylum seekers as a principle are not informed in a language they understand as none of the existing detention centres has interpreters among its staff. A copy of the detention order is usually provided to the individual. Bulgaria was one of the few EU member states not providing the legal safeguard of an automatic judicial review of the detention order. After the amendment of the law in 2009 the automatic judicial review was introduced, but not before 6 months of detention. This safeguard was available in national criminal proceedings for all individuals, irrespective of their nationality or origin, if accused of committing a crime, but until 2009 it was not guaranteed for those immigrants who were subjected to administrative detention for violation of the national immigration regime for the purpose of securing their deportation.

Presently, the law does not provide for automatic judicial review of detention orders before 6 months of detention. However, detention orders can be appealed within 14 calendar days¹⁵⁴ of the actual detention before the administrative court in the area of the headquarters of the authority which has issued the contested administrative act. The appeal does not suspend the execution of the order¹⁵⁵. The submission of the appeal is additionally hindered by the fact that the detention orders are not interpreted or translated. In view of the fact that deportation orders in principle are always issued for immediate implementation, the short deadline for lodging an appeal proved to be highly disproportionate and usually not respected by detained individuals, including asylum seekers.

Under the law, an automatic judicial revision is provided only after 6 months from the beginning of the detention. The management of the detention centre has the obligation to submit to the court a list of the individuals who have remained in detention for a period longer than 6 months. The administrative court decides for extension, termination or substitution of detention with an alternative measure in a session behind closed doors.

The Law on Asylum and Refugees when adopted allowed for examination of asylum applications in detention centres until the opening of transit centres which was a condition, regulated in §5 of the Additional Clauses. In May 2012 however, the legal ground for examining asylum applications in detention centres was abolished by the fact of the opening of the first transit asylum centre in Pastrogor, i.e. the condition of §5 of the Additional Clauses of the law became a fact, making examinations of asylum applications in detention centres unlawful. Thus, the period when an asylum application was examined in detention cannot be considered as a period during which a person is held in a detention centre on the basis of a decision taken pursuant to the provisions of national and Community law concerning asylum seekers and to be disregarded as detention for the purpose of removal within the meaning of Article 15 of Decision 2008/115. Therefore until transposition of the Recast Reception Conditions Directive national courts should consider any detention of asylum seekers, disregarding the actual period of the detention as illegal, not only those which are extending the 18 months maximum duration of Article 15 (5) and (6). It should be reflected also in the law, providing general rules and criteria for detention.

However, the draft law of 19 November 2013 amending the Asylum Law, if adopted, will broaden the possibilities to detain asylum seekers as it proposes to transpose verbatim Article 8(3) of Directive 2013/32/EU. If adopted the detention of asylum seekers would become possible at the stages of registration, in relation to Dublin and accelerated procedures under the LAR, or, in other words, prior to the initiation of the regular procedure on the substance of the asylum application. At the regular procedure's stage, detention should not be permitted, except in exceptional cases, i.e. where there are serious grounds to believe that a person constitutes a threat to national security or public order.

¹⁵⁵ Law on Aliens, Article 46a.

Interview for the asylum application are not yet carried out in the detention centres as the relevant draft amendments are not yet adopted. Detained asylum seekers are not interviewed until released and transported to reception centres of the SAR. Problems arise from the detention duration which extended from 36 days in 2012 to 45 days in 2014 on average on account of national asylum system failure to ensure registration and accommodation in due course to all who applied for asylum. Among the many reasons for this failure was the lack of administrative and reception capacity of the asylum authority, the SAR.

D. Legal assistance

Indicators:

- Does the law provide for access to free legal assistance for the review of detention?
 Yes No
- Do asylum seekers have effective access to free legal assistance in practice? Yes No

In mid-2013 the Law on Legal Aid amendments was finally adopted.¹⁵⁶ Alongside the right for legal aid for asylum seekers, the BHC lobbied for another amendment of the Law on Legal Aid related to detained irregular migrants. Similar to asylum seekers as of 19 March 2013, detained immigrants also gained the right to enjoy legal aid (Article 22(9) of the Law on Legal Aid). During the drafting of the amendment of the Aliens Law the BHC also successfully lobbied for an extension of detention appeal deadline, which was extended from 7 to 14 days (Article 46a(1) of the Aliens Law). Notwithstanding the amendments, legal aid is not yet provided to detainees due to National Bureau for Legal Aid's budget constraints (for more information see Asylum Procedures, Regular Procedure, Legal assistance).
